Editorial

By Maggie Thompson

➽ I'm back in the office, I've changed the message on my answering machine, I've called back some of the people who left their messages, and now it's May.

The library in Waupaca has moved up the dates on the comics display there, so we're scurrying to produce that material at the same time we're wrapping up the tallying on the CBG fan awards.

And so goes the comics world in Iola.

➽ Michael Dean has just rolled two spines in handling (his own) 1960s-era comics in the office. John Miller is shouting, "Escort him from the building!"

Michael murmurs something about the comics only being reprints, to which John, hardly what most people would term a speculator, wildly responds, "Listen, Marvel Tales #1 is $225 in mint. Marvel Tales #2 is $75. #3 is $40. The actual Amazing Spider-Man #19 [a copy of which, unbagged, has been sitting on Michael's desk for some time] is $250 in mint — and yours are way off mint, because of the care you've taken of them. You have custody of one of, say, 10,000 surviving copies, and you're taking shoddy care of it."

Michael weakly responds, "I was a kid when I got it."

John points out, "It's been many years since you were a kid and you're still taking lousy care of your comics."

The pitched battle soon quiets to their usual office sniping, as Michael returns to the topic, which is a discussion of Ditko's art — and he hastily unrolls the spines, as John tells him he'll have to learn to take better care of his treasures before the state takes custody of them.

Ah, it's great to be back!

➽ Having passed the editorial so far to the parties involved, I find further discussion springs up. Michael denies his response was delivered "weakly" and opts for "calmly." He also mutters something about not wanting it to appear that he would succumb to pressure and somehow improve the care he takes of the comics in his custody. John, on the other hand, is concerned that people may interpret his remarks to indicate that he cares more about condition and investment than about content, pointing out that his remarks were founded in concern for depleted supplies of hard-to-find issues.

➽ I hardly have room left in this editorial to express my pleasure at the delights of visits to Pro/Con, WonderCon, and Dark Horse. (It was my first visit ever to Dark Horse, by the way — and it was a treat, a combination of fun which will pay off in news and views in months to come. But now I'm really out of room!)

Thanks

A number of Krause Publications employees contributed to the photo shoot for this week's cover and interior logos. Our child model was Zachary Beyer, the son of Melissa and Brad Beyer of Iola, Wis. Melissa works in our Old Cars advertising department and Zachary was also featured on the cover of a recent issue of Goldmine, sister publication of CBG. While many of the items shown on our cover came from the collections of CBG Editor Maggie Thompson and Associate Editor Brent Frankenhoff, Toy Shop Editor Sharon Korbeck also loaned us materials. Of course, we offer special thanks to KP photographer Ross Hubbard.

Marvel takes another step toward the auction block

By Michael Dean

Marvel Entertainment Group Inc. and Toy Biz Inc. signed a letter of intent April 28 to separate Marvel Comics from Marvel Entertainment's Fleer/SkyBox and Panini subsidiaries and merge the comics company into Toy Biz. If approved by all the parties involved, the proposal would essentially become the opening bid in the auction of Marvel Entertainment.

The proposal is Marvel's latest plan for satisfying its debtors and taking the company out of Chapter 11 reorganization under the Bankruptcy Code. Under the terms of the proposed Toy Biz/Marvel merger, Marvel's secured lenders would receive the cash proceeds of a new $250 million loan and a five-year note covering another $170 million. In lieu of the remaining $290 million of Marvel's debt, Marvel's lenders would receive a 28% equity in the newly merged Toy Biz/Marvel and all of the stock of Fleer/SkyBox and Panini. Toy Biz shareholders would own the other 72% of the new company.

Current Marvel shareholders would receive two series of three-year warrants entitling them to acquire a total of 12.5% of common stock in the new company. Of that, 7.5% would be based on a diluted "enterprise value" of $950 million, while the remaining 5% to be acquired in the second series of warrants would be based on an "enterprise value" of $1.1 billion.

Marvel also proposed to initiate an auction process to be overseen by an investment banking firm that would seek higher bids. Those bids could be for the merged Marvel/Toy Biz or for Marvel alone (including Marvel's 26.7% interest in Toy Biz). If a bidder were to purchase Marvel separately from Toy Biz, Toy Biz shareholders would be paid a breakup fee of $7 million. The Fleer/SkyBox trading-card operation and the Panini sticker business would also be sold in a separate auction.

Stressing that there will be no impact on the day-to-day operations of Marvel Comics, a Marvel spokesperson told CBG, "This plan calls for the highest and best bid that ensures maximum recovery for all parties at interest."

Meanwhile, a group of Marvel bondholders have appealed a court-imposed restriction that prevents the bondholders from voting their shares and replacing Marvel Entertainment's board of directors. A May 1 hearing on the appeal has been postponed until June 1.

The bondholder group, led by Carl Icahn, has vowed to fight the proposed merger because it would have the effect of diluting the value of the shares which are collateral for their bonds. In a statement quoted in the April 29 Wall Street Journal, Icahn's bondholders called the merger "an outrageous sweetheart deal for the banks and Toy Biz insiders."

The bondholder group has already installed a new board of directors at Marvel Holdings Corp., a holding company for Marvel stock, and has proposed its own reorganization plan. The bondholders' plan would raise $365 million via a rights offering on Marvel bonds and would establish an executive transition team led by former Marvel executive Joseph Calamari to oversee the company's recovery.

May Marvel titles flash back to earlier times

May-shipping Marvel titles will remember the days of their youth in the month-long Flashback promotional event. The event, which covers most titles in the Marvel universe, is designed to fill new readers in on the origins of current characters. Each Flashback issue will be numbered "-1" and will have a retro look.

Marvel President and COO David Schreff said, "The comic-book industry has progressed so far that picking up a comic book today can be like tuning in to a daily soap opera for the first time on a Wednesday afternoon. Flashback is our response to customer requests to make Marvel comic books more user-friendly and accessible to a broader audience."

The stories will focus on events preceding and surrounding the characters' elevation to super-hero status. Stan Lee will appear on each Flashback splash page in the form of his caricature "ringmaster" persona from Generation X.

Describing the Flashback concept as "an on-ramp for a new generation of readers," Marvel Editor in Chief Bob Harras said, "Who better to introduce this look back to a time of simpler comics, simpler storytelling, than Stan Lee, who is Marvel Comics and the man who revolutionized the comic-book industry by introducing the concept of a super-hero imbued with human frailties?"

The Flashback issues will figure into ongoing continuity as literal flashbacks by the main characters. Participating titles include Amazing Spider-Man, Avengers, Cable, Daredevil, Deadpool, Elektra, Excalibur, Generation X, Ghost Rider, The Incredible Hulk, Journey into Mystery, Spider-Man, Sensational Spider-Man, Silver Surfer, Spectacular Spider-Man, Uncanny X-Men, Untold Tales of Spider-Man, X-Factor, X-Force, X-Man, X-Men, What If?, and Wolverine. Special Flashback titles not part of an ongoing series include Alpha Flight: In the Beginning ..., Ka-Zar: Sibling Rivalries, Thunderbolts: Distant Rumblings, and Venom: Seed of Darkness.

Of the Heroes Reborn titles, only Avengers is scheduled to have a "-1" issue. Here is a sampling of scheduled Flashbacks:

In Daredevil #-1, Battlin' Jack Murdock takes his blind son to college. The nostalgic atmosphere of Joe Kelly's story is enhanced by the return of longtime DD artist Gene Colan.

Journey into Mystery #-1 presents the origin of the plan that is at the heart of the Lost Gods series, as Odin confronts the serpent god Seth for the first time. The story by Tom DeFalco and Ed Benes also includes appearances by Loki, Jane Foster, and Don Blake.

The Incredible Hulk #-1 explores memories of Bruce Banner's childhood abuse to reveal the possible origins of the repressed rage that is manifested in The Hulk. Peter David's story is drawn by Adam Kubert and Mark Farmer.

Untold Tales of Spider-Man is already a rètro series, so its #-1 issue flashes even further back, to a story of Peter Parker's parents. Veteran Spider-Man artist John Romita Sr. joins with writer Roger Stern for a story steeped in the atmosphere of the 1960s spy boom. Fred Hembeck provides a "L'il Petey" back-up feature.

The Spectacular Spider-Man #-1 looks at some formative events in the life of the young Flash Thompson. The story is written by J. M. DeMatteis and drawn by Luke Ross and Dan Green.

In the first of four issues written by James Robinson, Generation X #-1 presents the first encounter between Banshee — then police detective Sean Cassidy — and telepath Emma Frost. Chris Bachalo provides the art.

X-Men #-1 presents the birth of Magneto in a story by Scott Lobdell, Carlos Pacheco, and Art Thibert.

TSR updates release schedule

TSR recently announced a tentative revised schedule for new releases following the news that Wizards of the Coast intends to buy the financially troubled company. To that point, TSR had not shipped any of the new products it had scheduled for release in 1997.

Under the revised schedule, TSR will begin shipping new product in May, with 20 releases scheduled, and nearly that many in June.

Wizards of the Coast's plans for TSR, company spokespersons have said, will not be disclosed until after the sale has been finalized. One major issue to be resolved is the settlement of TSR's debts, including royalty payments owed to several TSR authors. In the Apr. 21 issue of Publishers Weekly, Science Fiction and Fantasy Writers of America President Michael Capobianco said that several members of that writers' organization had not received royalties from TSR in six months. In the same article, TSR Senior Vice President for Sales and Marketing expressed optimism that matters would be resolved with Wizards' acquisition.

TOTALLY DARK HORSE!

MASS O' MEDIA
By Matt Brady

Superman Family — way?

And more, including potential Marvel movies

★ Gossip columnist Liz Smith reported May 2 that Lois & Clark star Teri Hatcher is pregnant but filming on her James Bond project (Tomorrow Never Dies) will be adjusted to permit her role in the movie to remain unchanged.

In television news that can best be described as weird, ABC announced that it would pull Lois & Clark: The New Adventures of Superman from its Saturday lineup for the rest of May sweeps but promised that the show would return later in the summer. Despite its poor performance and the schedule change, Reuters also announced that the show has been renewed for the 1997-98 season. Insiders suggest that the '97-'98 season will be completed to fulfill syndication obligations, and the show will complete its run in the spring of 1998.

★ The latest, wildest rumor to fly around Superman Reborn is that Tim Burton insisted that Batman make a cameo appearance in the movie, played by none other than Michael Keaton. Rumor-mongers say that the Keaton-Batman hurdle was the last obstacle that was overcome to get Burton to sign. A spokesperson at John Peters' (producer of Superman Reborn) office said that nothing regarding The Dark Knight could be confirmed or denied.

★ It looks as though Hollywood won't have Marvel Comics to kick around anymore.

Thanks to the efforts of Marvel Studios, headed by Stan Lee and Avi Arad, Hollywood is taking a second look at a truckload of Marvel properties.

Think about it: From a producer's point of view, comic-book properties are a bargain. You've got a built-in audience which has, in some cases, read excerpts from 30-plus years of character development by some very talented writers and artists — and you get some pretty cool costumes, to boot.

However, things have never been good for Marvel films. (Remember The Punisher? Or, if you're really a masochist, Captain America?) But despite the horrendous box-office performance (or lack thereof) of previous Marvel properties, there are roughly 15 Marvel projects in development. The key words to remember here are "in development." Roughly 80% of all movies that are at one time or another in development are born, live, and die in development. However, with the major production and acting talent that's reportedly attached to these projects, signs are good that at least a good number of these projects will make it to the big screen. Here's what's in the works:

- Black Panther

PRESERVATION and STORAGE PRODUCTS by GERBER

Buy From THE SOURCE, 'The One-Stop Shop'

Why Are Our Prices so Low?

1. We invented the first Mylar® sealed sleeves in 1979.
2. Our 1985 patent is used by all our competitors.
3. Our patented equipment is sold and used world-wide, including two machines purchased by the Library of Congress.
4. We build all our own equipment. We do not buy from others. We keep the highest producing machines for ourselves & sell the rest.
5. We have patents or patents pending on many of our unique products.
6. Most importantly, our business logic is NOT to sell as high as the traffic will bear; but as low as possible to make our products available to more collectors. We take our Company Slogan seriously.

I would like to take a moment to thank one of the true legends of the comics medium, Joe Kubert, for putting the record straight on the matter of the Marvel-sponsored scholarships set up at his school. I tip my hat to Terry Stewart and Marvel Comics for funding scholarships to the Kubert School.

And, while I'm here, may I also give a great, whopping endorsement for Fax from Sarajevo, Joe Kubert's exceptional graphic novel? It, along with Joe Sacco's Palestine, is a prime example of how the medium can extend beyond the boundaries of mere entertainment. The story of Ervin Rustemagic and his family and of the tragedy of Bosnia is deftly handled by Kubert. I hope this powerful work finds a home in every library, public and private alike.

One more quick plug: I wholeheartedly encourage everyone to try The Book of Ballads and Sagas by Charles Vess. Despite the fact that I've long admired Vess' work, I hadn't thought that a comic book concentrating on English, Scottish, and Irish folk ballads would be of interest to me.

Wrong, wrong, wrong!

Combining stories that are frightening, humorous, and sad, along with some of the most astonishingly detailed artwork to ever grace a piece of Bristol board, Vess (along with such co-conspirators as Neil Gaiman, Jeff Smith, and Jane Yolen) has managed to turn this one-time Doubting Thomas into a True Believer. If The Book of Ballads and Sagas isn't available at your local comics shop, it can be ordered from Vess' Green Man Press, 152 E. Main St., Abingdon, VA 24210.

And last, but certainly not least, I'd like to extend my most sincere best wishes and positive thoughts to both Maggie Thompson (get well soon) and to John Ostrander. Both of you folks take care of yourselves, please.

Regarding your recent (I received it this past Saturday) issue and its article on Star Wars comics, I have some information I hope proves useful: Enclosed please find copies of the outer and inner front covers to the Blackthorne Star Wars 3-D #2 and 3. Issue #2 is titled "Havoc on Hoth," while #3 has the Pink Floyd-influenced name of "The Dark Side of Dantooine." None of this trilogy is particularly outstanding or terrible (although #2 is far better than #3), but, since no glasses are included, reading them is more difficult than it should be. I have to use the glasses that came with Batman 3-D, a wonderful John Byrne project that didn't receive the recognition it deserved. Oh, well.

Back to the issue at hand: The coloring of the covers and the art itself leaves much to be desired. On #3, Darth Vader's costume includes a purple cape and a green belt, and they're not just tricks of the light. And if the title wasn't Star Wars 3-D, Chewbacca would be unrecognizable on the cover of #2. And I almost forgot — a meteor-shower sequence in issue #2 repeats the idea of the one in The Empire Strikes Back, but not nearly as well. These comic books only figure as novelties in the realm of Star Wars licensing, but at least I don't have to wonder if I'm missing anything.

One other question, and I hope I didn't miss the answer already: What happened to the trading-card price guide? It should have appeared three times since its last inclusion, and I, for one, miss it and its contests. If you don't print this letter, perhaps you could put an answer to this query elsewhere.

[As you've probably already seen, the Entertainment Card Guide appeared in CBG #1225. Its frequency has simply dropped from monthly to bimonthly. The next issue will come with CBG #1234.]

Poor Maggie must have too much to read — she seems to have missed Nat Gertler's point entirely (Oh, So?, CBG #1221). The electronic-publishing scenario Gertler described is one in which the price (in money, at least) to the comics reader was nil, because the costs of publication had been shouldered entirely by the advertisers. If, additionally, the user doesn't want to face the "cost" of having to ignore the ads — easier to do on the net, at least for me, than it is when watching television or listening to radio — she or he will have to "pay" in the extra effort of finding an ad-free version or deriving it him or herself. In all these cases, the cost to the user is in time, effort, or annoyance value, rather than in money (unless the user is so unlucky that the only bootlegger the user can find is one who charges, which is entirely possible, even on the Web).

The person who goes "to the effort of downloading the file, stripping out the ads, and then making it available for others to download" would have to make the derived site significantly accessible compared to the original site in order to be a threat to the creator (or, more accurately, the copyright holder). Not more accessible — just on a scale comparable with the original. And if it is easily accessible to an audience of end-users who might otherwise go to the advertising site, it is equally easily detected by the copyright holder and his/her lawyers. The URL and its supporting ISP eventually lead to the copyright violator.

The hunting license conferred by copyright does not make the system leakproof — no more than print is resistant to photocopying. I've received e-mail "sillies" that turned out to be Dave Barry columns stripped of credits and, just last week, I viewed on the Web a half-dozen corrupt versions of the "Twinkie Experiment" published a few years ago in Spy. But, just as making enough photocopies of a work to be a serious threat to the economic interest of the copyright holder makes you more likely to be caught, so, too, letting your bootleg site be cross-referenced on Alta Vista makes it more likely that someone who knows and cares that the work is copyrighted will see your pirated copy.

The irony is that the most immediate threat to the economic interests of the creator is posed by the publisher. Bullying or tricking freelancers into signing work-for-hire contracts is one tactic; lying on royalty statements is another; both, alas, are common in paper publishing. So, when electronic publishing first started opening up, on the World Wide Web and on CD, who were the first to make electronic reprints behind the creators' backs? Book and magazine publishers whose contracts said nothing about additional compensation for reproduction of the work in media not explicitly described. The National Writers' Union fought for years to get electronic-publishing language added to book and article contracts.

If a comics creator is concerned that his or her work will be distributed on the Web without due compensation, his or her first line of defense should be to make sure an electronic-publishing clause (or one applying to all media besides paper, including media not yet invented) is in the contract with his or her paper-media comics publisher. Not only is the creator protected (at least on paper, no pun intended) from being cheated by the publisher, but the publisher joins the creator's fight against bootleggers; it, too, is threatened by unauthorized reproduction.

Many of those who assume that a new medium presents a whole new ballgame are unaware that the same patterns have played out over and over again in the various preceding media, with the actual differences being relatively subtle. There are still those who create the work, those who possess the technology and human connections to distribute it to the public, and those members of the public who desire access to the work. There are, as Gertler pointed out, those who are involved neither in the creation, publication, nor consumption of the work who would be more than glad to piggyback their own interests on the public's demand for the work in question; this is well-established in both print and broadcast media. Thus, a variety of pathways form as to who pays whom for what.

Are public, private, and university libraries cheating the author and publisher? In a way, since they allow readers to see a work without paying for it and, therefore, decrease demand for purchased copies. But as long as the library pays for the actual book, the cultural precedent has been set to allow it to make the book available to multiple users within certain constraints, including time-limited use, membership qualifications, and fees — all defined by the library, not publishers. Some of the precedents were set before there was movable type, let alone chain bookstores and multimedia publishing conglomerates. It is easy to forget oddities like this when we consider the Internet to be something that creates entirely new situations.

In the early days of telephone service, one could subscribe to live music performances that could be listened to over the line. Radio was not always paid for by commercials. Most magazines and newspapers today charge both the reader and the advertiser. "Public" broadcasting has ads clustered at the end of the program, in the guise of naming the sponsors. The way television is paid for has changed within my lifetime — including a betrayal of the initial promise that "pay TV" would increase the amount of commercial-free programming available.

Movies bought in a video store allow a group to view for less than it costs for one person to watch the same film in a movie theatre. The technology is but one of many deciding factors in who pays and is paid; all the rest consist of human relationships, which can change over time.

Electronic publishing is neither the end of the world as we know it nor the beginning of a completely alien world.

In CBG #1221, Nat Gertler addressed some of the methods of dealing with technology and its impact upon comics. Your response indicates that you remain deeply concerned about the unauthorized reproduction of artistic material.

A bit of background: I have more than 17 years of experience in the field of information technology, including systems administration and software development, consulting, and strategic technology management for large corporations. The technology I will discuss has existed for several years, is available to most businesses, and currently is in widespread use in areas such as electronic commerce.

In the most basic scenario, an individual wishes to purchase an item from an online retailer. We assume the customer and retailer both have computers and an electronic connection via a network such as the Internet. In order to make this a secure transaction, in which product and payment are exchanged in such a way as to preclude unauthorized access, we need two software applications. Both the customer and retailer must have software programs that can generate, embed, and decode encrypted identification numbers (often referred to as tokens). What does this mean and how does this work?

1) The customer fills out an electronic order form.

CORTO MALTESE: BALLAD OF THE SALT SEA #2

The comic book serialisation of this first epic adventure which introduced the legendary character continues. Rasputin enlicits Corto's help in commandeering a freighter of coal to sell to the Germans for gold. Then a cyclone strikes and scatters our characters all over an island! This next action-packed episode sees many twists as Corto does his best to keep Pandora and Cain alive against Rasputin's more cynical wishes...

The sexually free '70s. Young, beautiful Marta goes for a vacation to be with her friend on her isolated beach house. the warm sun, lazy beach breezes and sensuous group of friends slowly but surely take over the senses. In such surroundings, clothes become useless and lustful desires flow naturally...Marta lets herself go with her very explorative companions like she had never done before. Done pseudonymously by an established comic artist, this is a sensuous, sensitively written increasingly breathless descent into sheer carnality like only such a warm private beach setting could possibly bring about. A very real fantasy that could very well happen to any one of us.

2) Prior to sending this form to the retailer, the customer's software application encrypts the information and embeds (inserts) a token (think of it as a more complex version of the old encoder/decoder rings).

3) The retailer's software application receives and decrypts (decodes) the message.

4) The retailer's software then makes a copy of the requested item (in this case, let's say it is a digital comic book) and embeds the customer's token within the item. This is, in effect, a digital signature.

5) The item itself is then encrypted and transmitted to the customer.

6) The customer's software application receives and decrypts the item.

7) The transaction is complete, and the customer now has his or her own digital comic book.

The tokens are generated automatically by the software applications. No human eyes ever see them. Each token is generated only once. This means that all items have a unique digital signature that uniquely associates each item with a particular customer. The item must be accessed via the decryption software. The customer cannot make a copy of the item and pass it on, because the token has been embedded in the item. Other customers may have the same software application, but their program will not be able to recognize another customer's token.

Can someone "break" the software code? Certainly. It might require 10 supercomputers running full speed for 10 years, but it could be done. Is it worth it for someone to do this? I doubt it. By the time the code is broken, more sophisticated security software will be on the market. One often hears reports of crackers breaking security codes. There are generally three reasons for this: 1) The cheap version of the security software was being used, 2) the security software was improperly configured, and 3) the person responsible for implementing security left his or her systems wide open in other areas.

Could someone simply make a copy of the software application and send that to someone else, along with the digital comic book? Yes, but with great difficulty. When these software applications are installed on a given computer, they record information about the environment, such as the type of operating system (Windows, DOS, etc.) in use, equipment installed on the computer (names and types of hard drives, etc.), and some even record the serial number of the microprocessor chip. This information is also stored in an encrypted format, and the software simply will not work if any of this information doesn't match.

There are ways around these things, but one would need to go through many painstaking procedures each time an unauthorized item is obtained. Ultimately, it is not worth the effort, not to mention the potential of really screwing up one's computer each time one attempts something like this.

Of course, there are less expensive (and less secure) methods, just as there are much more expensive (and much more secure) methods, depending upon the value of the item one wishes to protect. Governments, stock exchanges, retailers, and finance companies all rely on this technology. I feel certain that it would be practical for the entertainment industry.

As to Gertler's comments concerning the reduced costs associated with electronicdistribution: Most users currently pay a flat fee for Internet access. Not so in the future. In order for the Internet to survive, we can expect usage fees based upon volume and distance — in much the way the U.S. Post Office charges fees based upon size, weight, and distance. Why? Larger files consume more bandwidth and reduce the amount of resources available to other users, and it really does cost more to send an e-mail from Iola to Hong Kong than it does to send an e-mail from Iola to Symco. Someone must pay for these services.

One possible alternative is advertising. I shudder at the thought of having to endure 15 minutes of advertising each time I connect. Ultimately, electronic distribution will be cheaper, but not free.

A parting thought: The back cover of CBG #1222 advertises the new 27th edition of the Overstreet Comic Book Price Guides. Notice "guides" is plural. Overstreet's 27th is being published in two versions — one with a Silver Age Green Lantern cover and the other with a Silver Age Flash cover, both gorgeous works of art. Why couldn't Overstreet simply put one on the front and the other on the back and be done with it? As pricy as Overstreet editions are, I seriously doubt many collectors will purchase both.

As always, thanks for everything you continue to do for the fans.

Just a note to let you know I really enjoy your editorial. It is one of the first things I read. It is always interesting and introduces what the issue is all about each week.

I always like the covers, but #1216, with all the Star Wars covers, was awesome. The variety is something else. John Miller did a great job telling about the covers and writers. I'm sure he did a lot of reading and research.

CBG is always enjoyable. When I first get it, everyone leaves me alone for an hour, because I am so busy reading all the articles.

Recent Marvel back issues became available through Diamond, so I decided to order some of virtually everything available — more to see what they were like than anything else.

The good news: The issues shipped promptly. The bad news: Nothing has changed. Marvel still seems to have trouble telling a story that can hold the interest of anyone with an IQ higher than that of a one-celled organism. Lots of posing and verbal posturing. Plenty of meaningless fights signifying nothing.

My customers, who in the absence of Marvel turned on to other comics by other publishers, have been extremely slow and unforgiving about becoming involved with Marvel again.

Marvel '60s and '70s back issues continue to do well, however, as Baby Boomers become an increasingly more visible force in the marketplace. I speak, of course, of comic books with single-digit prices.

Thank God I diversified! Ignoring all the hype concerning the current "next hot thing" cost me potential sales in the short term. But, as a result, I am far less affected by the gut-wrenching turns of the current marketplace. My sales volume in pin-up magazines nearly equals that for back-issue comics. People are beginning to cop to the notion that new comics are not the enduring collectibles they have been made out to be. On the other hand, so many are used to being manipulated by hype that their perceptions have become permanently bent. I recently placed two local ads offering "classic" and "rare" Star Trek and Mars Attacks items. Everyone who responded was only looking for current and recent action figures.

How sad.

Here's to all of you who remember when collectors actually collected instead of being passive consumers and slavish dupes.

I read with fevered anticipation the plans to fix Heroes Reborn. The question asked by Kurt Busiek was how to make it all make sense.

Years ago, Jay Ward created a cartoon called Hoppity Hooper starring a Frog, Bear, and Wolf. Like Ward's other cartoon creation, Bullwinkle, the scripts were satirical in nature. One story was called "The Traffic Zone," a Twilight Zone parody wherein Hoppity and his friends were trapped in a pocket world that transformed them into living vegetables: a turnip, beet, and radish (if memory serves). The transformed characters still retained their personality traits, even though they bore little resemblance to their previous selves. The brainy Waldo figured out that they could change back by planting themselves in a nearby garden, which the three heroes did. Thus, the nightmare was over by the end of the fourth episode of the story.

A similar idea could be used to explain anything fans did not like that affected the hero histories of Marvel's Reborn characters. The Heroes are visited by a Watcher named Jack who tells them they have been living a lie for the past several months. One by one, as the heroes slipped into this pocket universe, they were changed. They'd be amazed to know how little they resemble their former selves. Also, equally important: Their friends and family members need them desperately. (Familiar enemies of these heroes could be shown ravaging the regular Marvel New York City.)

Jack shows them "panels of their lives" (old comic-book panels from classic issues of their comics), and they begin to remember the lives they left behind. The Watcher further compels the heroes by telling them "You'll never know a life of consistency, if you stay here. You, Steve Rogers, Captain America: Don't you feel strange during the day, as though your body is constantly in a state of flux, changing in size and structure in proportion to the people and things around you? Once you get home these memories and distortions of your true selves will only be a bad dream and nothing more." Captain America exclaims "I can't believe the lie I fell for!" Back on earth, the heroes explain where they've been for the past year. They compare their situation to The Secret Wars that had involved many of the same heroes, including Spider-Man. Daredevil says to a disbelieving Spider-Man, "If anyone should understand what it's like to live a lie, it should be you." Thus ends a year-long nightmare for these characters. Every great Marvel event has a name, so I used the only name that would be appropriate: Distorted Image.

This is a letter I've been meaning to write for some time now, so some of it may not be timely, but here goes. I hope everyone else out in fandom enjoyed the April 1 comics pages in the newspapers as much as I did. As much as I enjoy the Amalgam-type super-hero crossover action, it was great to see Garfield inspecting a Dagwood sandwich, from within the frames of Dag's own strip, as a change of pace to the usual pan of lasagna. Do you have some kind of list of all the artist/character crossovers done for this April Fool extravaganza?

My editorial comment on Superman's new costume: Yechh! I saw a quote in the paper recently by Mike Carlin (I hope that's who it was) who said, "This isn't New Coke." Well, yes, you're right. While I liked the old Coke better, at least the New Coke doesn't make me retch. I hope the new costume sticks around about as long as Superman's death did.

Switching gears, I feel bad about the financial troubles that Marvel is suffering from but I can't help thinking that it brought some of this on itself with the exclusive-distributor battles. I don't understand enough of the business end of this stuff but I do know that a couple of comic-book shops in the area have gone under, too. It also made me sorry for those folks who were selling those one-share stock certificates for Marvel. I'll bet that those are literally not worth the paper they're printed on now.

Switching gears again, can anyone there tell me how many issues of the Now version of Green Hornet were printed? I know that the volume 1 run ran from #1 to #14. It's the volume 2 run that I'm seeking to complete that has me confused. It seems that several of the guides I've looked at differed; one said the title was ongoing (Ha!), while others ended at numbers earlier than my last issue. In particular, two different price guides at my comics shop said that issue #39 was the last one. Do these guys do their own research, or did one borrow from the other? One guide goes on to say that several more were solicited but were never printed. However, the last issue I have is #40. So do I have the last issue there at #40? As much as I enjoy the chase of finding an obscure comic book, I prefer to make it a fair fight and know what I am looking for.

Comics-shop owners I asked didn't know much, other than that they had been solicited for more issues than were ultimately printed.

I'll toss in my comments about delivery. Here in suburban Chicago, my CBG usually arrives on a Thursday. For a while there, several months ago, it was not getting here until the following

I read with great interest the article several issues back regarding the counterfeiting of a valuable Cry for Dawn comic book. With new color-reproduction technology and a plethora of small printers able to duplicate a black-and-white comic book's interior right down to the original paper stock, there have been surprisingly few incidents of this nature in the comics industry. I guess one of the advantages of being involved in a relatively small, cliquish, and insulated hobby is that large-scale scams rarely go unnoticed by the few of us who pay close attention to these things.

I certainly never expected that any of the comics from Revolutionary Comics would be copied and sold as originals, mainly because nearly all the Rock 'n' Roll Comics and related titles remain available from Re-Visionary Press. However, a few scarce titles which we've been sold out of for some time have turned up recently in the comics market, as poorly reproduced copies of the originals. The comics are issues of The Beatles Experience series, which ran for eight issues, most of which have been sold out for more than a year now. With the resurgence of The Beatles' popularity, original copies of the 1992 comics seem to sell for around $10, sometimes more.

Make no mistake, however, since even the originals are not rare, by black-and-white comic-book standards, anyway. (About 50,000 copies of each edition were printed.) Neither is the series a high-ticket item among Beatles aficionados, at least, not as prized as Cry for Dawn is among comics fans, though it's certainly among the better comics we did at Revolutionary. It's odd that The Beatles Experience has had the dubious honor of being counterfeited, but I've seen several copies which confirm the counterfeit's existence.

As in the Cry for Dawn case, the copies are noticeable due to a web-like "strobing" pattern most evident in the background colors of the art. Apparently, this effect comes from trying to copy pre-screened artwork, meaning art which has already been broken into small dots for reproduction. The color brilliance on the counterfeit copies is a good bit dimmer than on the originals, though the interior of the comics seems to be duplicated and bound much like the originals. Some of the counterfeits have a black line around the outer edges of the comic book.

Please be advised that these counterfeit copies of The Beatles Experience may still be circulating and pay close attention accordingly. We have no idea how many might be out there and are aware of at least around a dozen which were sold at comics conventions based in New England and along the East Coast. Any information regarding the source of this duplication will be appreciated and rewarded.

I saw Tom Conolly's letter regarding the female figure in comics and just had to add my 2¢. Artists draw what and how they like. Most male artists who draw large busts on their female characters are doing so because:

- they like them. Face it, breasts fascinate some men for reasons they can't always put into words. Hell, I know. I'm one of those men.
- that's the way everyone else is drawing (house style).
- they like the proportions that the added shapes create. Or —
- they don't know any other way.

There are women artists out there who draw female characters with large breasts — check out Fauve's or Joyce Chin's work. And there are male artists who don't or have a hard time drawing female characters with these proportions.

Artists in general want to draw what they like. When I have asked artists for sketches of massively muscled women I've had quite a few fail to put any muscle on at all simply because they can't get rid of the block that their mind imposes between their idea of what a character should look like and someone else's idea.

I've seen Jan Duursema and Adam Hughes do fantastic female figures that run the gamut of massively muscled to slender and petite. And I've seen other artists lock themselves in a style that slenderizes or inflates all their female characters.

I know a fully rounded woman is more interesting than a pneumatic angel without a wit of sense. And you see it reflected in comics like Strangers in Paradise and Wandering Star. But don't think for a minute that comic books like Glory or Lady Death could have lasted as long as they have simply due to their inflated chests. The fascination will hold buyers only for a little while, and then it's on to the next pair, if it were not for the writing that supports their stories.

As for breasts themselves, they are not genitalia. They are secondary sexual characteristics. Genitalia are involved in reproduction. Breasts are designed for later. If artists were drawing oversized genitalia for women or men you'd only be seeing them in the adult sections of the comics displays, with Eros and Penthouse Comix. Yes, breasts are sexual. But mostly for the observer.

I'm more disturbed by depictions of cruelty where there is no punishment for the inflictors of that cruelty. Fortunately, this has been limited, but the fact that it appears and that the writers and artists seem to enjoy their work in these cases bothers me. Do I think they should be censored? No. I have other ideas, but most of those are cruel in and of themselves. But censorship? Never.

SAN DIEGO COMIC CON INTERNATIONAL

COMIC-CON INTERNATIONAL is a nonprofit corporation dedicated to creating awareness of and appreciation for comics and related popular art forms,

By Maggie Thompson

• Sirius has scheduled the creator-owned Scary Godmother by Jill Thompson (no, no relation) for shipping in time for Halloween sales. It will be a hardcover featuring little Hannah Marie and her Halloween adventures when she meets her scary godmother.

Material available so far consists of color photocopies of 13 pages of Thompson's art. There is no script with the story at this point, but Hannah Marie is shown going into a spooky house with some other children and encountering a weeping witchly creature.

The project has the potential to be a seasonal all-ages favorite; the water-color art is attractive and accessible, and the characters are intriguing. The scary-looking monster is no more horrible than a Maurice Sendak Wild Thing, and the fact that the Scary Godmother is so clearly happy and unafraid provides a spirit of happy optimism to the whole project. Now to see how well the script supports the book.

• Marvel's Deadpool #5 (May 97, $1.99) begins almost perfectly. The first page offers character pictures and background; the second provides a summary to this point; the third begins the story. It's reader-friendly — clear and concise — and it shouldn't take the reader long to figure out that "Wade Wilson" is Deadpool's name. The issue is written by Joe Kelly, pencilled by Ed McGuinness and Kevin Lau, and inked by Nathan Massengill. In this issue they resolve the tension between Wilson (out to kill his "creator") and Dr. Killbrew (understanding the anger of his "creation"). Siryn plays a part in the story, and readers get a dose of character relationships as well as action. The art supports the story nicely, and even a new reader can follow the action easily.

• Caliber's Saint Germaine #1 (1997, black and white, $2.95) is written by Gary Reed and drawn by Vincent Locke. It opens with a series of suicides driven by inner torment — and something else. Then the story segues to a conversation between a mysterious man and an author of books on religion and cults. The mysterious man says he has lived for centuries, is dying, and wants the author to record his story.

"St. Germaine the Deathless" has provided the focus for many works of fiction, including a series of fantasy novels by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro. Reed's version seems to involve questions about life and death, heaven and hell, truth and history, and good and evil — in the course of a series which also involves a woman who sucks horrible secrets from suicides.

Reed and Locke manage to keep the story moving and intriguing, although much of the content so far is a moral debate. There are sinister subtexts and fantasy overtones to both action and dialogue.

• Without running art samples again, two award-winning classics should be noted. Kurt Busiek's Astro City and Jeff Smith's Bone have shipped new issues recently. Both creators (not to overlook artists Brent Anderson and Will Blyberg on Astro City) have been steady award nominees and winners for their work on these series. Readers who look for the best the comics form has to offer must already have these titles on reserve at comics shops.

For the record, though, Bone #27 (Apr 97, $2.95) is out and simultaneously funny and intensely dramatic, as Thorn becomes transformed into a dynamic warrior. Anyone reading this who has not followed Bone should immediately order trade paperbacks of past issues and get up to date. (And fans should prepare to buy the delightful Phoney Bone statue by Randy Bowen which will ship some time this year.) And Astro City #6 (Feb 97, $2.50) is in the middle of a multi-part story and (yay!) carefully provides character identification this issue. It's a must.

[Editor's note: Comics Buyer's Guide #1228 for May 30, our next issue, will feature a look at war comics in a tribute to the men and women who gave up security, risking their health and their very lives, for the security and lives of others. This week, Tony provides some thoughts in advance.]

"He shot 12 for 23. It doesn't take a genius to see that's under 50%."

– Sportscaster Dick Vitale

I just went two weeks without reading a comic book. It wasn't as if I were trying to kick the habit or anything. It just sort of happened as a side effect of a particularly busy period of doing other stuff: family stuff and house stuff and parent stuff and stuff stuff. Stuff can be very time-consuming.

I even did some male-bonding stuff with my father and my son.

Courtesy of a possible comic-book project for the Air Force, the Isabella men were given a private tour of the Ohio Air National Guard 179th Airlift Wing base in Mansfield, Ohio. My father, Louis, was in the Army Air Corps during World War II and my son Eddie has wanted to be a pilot since he was 4.

(Eddie will be 9 in June. Therefore, he has wanted to be a pilot for more than half his life. That's not terribly important to this report, but it does justify the opening quote and demonstrates my superior mathematical skills.)

Master Sergeant Gary Davis was our congenial tour guide. He briefed us on the mission of the 179th and showed us one of the largest collections of model airplanes in the world. There are more than 600 of them, all built by members of the 179th.

He took us aboard a C-130H Hercules transport plane. Eddie got to sit in the pilot's seat. I don't know which was wider, his eyes or his smile.

Sgt. Davis walked us around a state-of-the-art fire-fighting vehicle.

That puppy was 2.3 million dollars' worth of conflagration-crushing technology and roughly the size of Rhode Island.

He showed us the 179th's command center, an amazingly compact operation about the size of my own office. They have more buttons and switches; I have more Godzilla toys.

He even gave us lovely parting gifts. Eddie got a bag filled with stuff like a 179th Frisbee, pencil, posters, and water bottle, plus a second bag to bring home to his sister Kelly. My dad and I got 179th key chains/Swiss army knives.

One of the most impressive things about this tour was our tour guide. Sgt. Davis is a family man who lives in Medina and commutes to Mansfield every morning. He is a Vietnam veteran who has been in the Ohio Air National Guard for 20 years. He is a dedicated professional: concerned, knowledgeable, and prepared to get the job done when his country calls upon him.

The 179th is a tactical airlift mission. It transports cargo and personnel throughout the United States and supports the U.S. Air Force in Europe and the Pacific, as well as Central and South America.

The Air National Guard has been involved in many humanitarian efforts, including airlifts to Somalia, Bosnia, and the victims of Hurricane Andrew. Closer to home, it has used its equipment and manpower in the areas of flood and tornado relief.

The military has, over the years, become a convenient villain in many comics and other forms of fiction. But, as we tell our stories and as we draw inspiration from the very real abuses and problems that have occurred over our country's history, we often lose sight of the equally real contributions the military has made to our lives and security.

I mentioned a possible comic-book project for the Air Force.

Originally, it was intended to be a 50th anniversary history of the Air Force and a look at its current mission. Oh, yeah, hopefully, we would have also had a pretty good story about the men and women of the Air Force in there, as well.

I was asked to write this comic book and quickly agreed. My reasons went well beyond a paycheck.

Had my father not been needed at home after World War II, he would have very likely remained in the Air Force. Writing this comic book would be a way of expressing my respect and admiration for one of my personal heroes.

As readers of this column have doubtless figured out, I'm not shy about stating my opinions on a wide range of topics, many of which have nothing to do with comic books. My freedom of speech is guaranteed by our nation's constitution, but, in a very real sense, it's also guaranteed by our strong military.

My son wants to be a military pilot. OK, he's 8 and he also wants to be a baseball player, a basketball player, a farmer, and a writer. But, when he gets older, if he does decide to pursue a military career, our nation will be the better for it. He's a fine boy, he'll be a fine man, and he is most certainly the kind of individual we should want in our armed forces.

I believe in heroes. This comic book would be consistent with that belief. It would remind us of those who have risked their lives to protect our liberties and those who will be called upon to risk their lives in the future. Heroes.

My Air Force contact spoke to several comics publishers about handling the production, printing, and direct-market distribution of this proposed comic book. All except one were interested in, at the very least, discussing the possibility. That company made it clear it didn't want to be involved with the military in any way, shape, or form. Frankly, its position baffled me.

The company in question has a long and proud history of public service. It has been a leader in the industry and done much to expand and nurture the comics medium. On occasion, I think some of its comics go beyond the bounds of good taste, but I can't fault it for taking some risks, only for the sometimes poor execution thereof. It has even published some excellent war comics over the years. Yet it reacted with a terror at the mere thought of working with the Air Force to celebrate its 50 years of service to our country and reaffirm its commitment to continue that service.

I'm sorry, but I just don't get it. This company can publish proudly a comic book in which murderous sociopaths have sex with barnyard animals, but it thinks it would be wrong to honor the men and women of the Air Force. Somebody help me out, here.

I respect companies and people who stand up for their beliefs, but I respect them more when those beliefs are consistent and well-reasoned. I'm nutty that way.

This Air Force comic book may never happen. Dealing with any branch of the government can be a complicated business. The same holds true for large corporations. If it happens, I'll be proud to be part of it. If it doesn't, I'll find another way to tell the story I want to tell. But, as we approach Memorial Day, I think it was appropriate for me to tell this part of the story.

It's our nature, as American citizens and as comics creators, to want things to be better. We abhor abuses of power, we decry moral lapses, we complain about government waste, and that's all to our credit. We set our sights high, indeed.

What isn't to our credit is our often-smug denial of the very real sacrifices and the exceptional dedication of the majority of the men and women who have given their lives and skills in service of our country. They deserve better.

On this Memorial Day, I honor my father and all the other fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters who served our country with courage and pride. I honor all those who never got the chance to become parents.

I remember when the phrase "Make war no more" was seen at the end of every story in comic books that dealt with both the heroism and the horror of war. It was, and still is, a noble aspiration.

But in no way does it negate our debt to those who have served on our behalf in the past or to those who, even now, stand ready to do so in the present and in the future.

On this Memorial Day, and on every other day of the year, they deserve our support and our thanks.

Tony Isabella, America's most beloved comic-book writer and columnist, was designated "1-E" during his eligibility for military service. That meant that, in the event of intergalactic travel, he would be the expendable ensign beamed down to unexplored planets with Capt. Kirk, Mr. Spock, and other series regulars.

You can send your comments on this column to: Tony's Tips, P.O. Box 1502, Medina, OH 44258.

Reread this

This issue's Silver Age theme has transported me back to the days of my youth. As long as Marvel is devoting the month to flashbacks of untold stories, I couldn't resist flashing back to a few "told stories" from Lee and Ditko's days on Amazing Spider-Man. The pleasures of these stories are in the small details that today's epics rarely have time for: High-school bully Flash Thompson defending his hero Spider-Man against Webhead's many detractors, J. Jonah Jameson beaming happily at a speaking engagement on the topic of "How I Proved That Spider-Man Is a Cowardly Fraud," and Spidey singing in the midst of battle with The Enforcers. (All these scenes can be found in Amazing Spider-Man #19).

Sure, Ditko dressed his characters in clothes that were 10 years out of date even when the comics came out and Lee's soap-opera histrionics sometimes made you check the cover to make sure you hadn't bought a copy of Teen-Age Romance by mistake. But Ditko's feel for character and story were nearly flawless. And Stan's sense of humor was a perfect anecdote for the pomposity of the superhero form. The team conveyed the sense that these characters were human beings and not just colliding trademarks.

Just imagine: DC's Imaginary Stories wed Lois and Clark multiple times and created some bizarre teams

In "Superman-Red, Superman-Blue," (Superman #162, Jul 63) arguably one of the zaniest of the Imaginary Stories of the '60s, the Man of Steel duplicated himself (upper right) and then, after accomplishing a number of super-goals he had previously been unable to do as a solo act, the twin Supermen contemplated and completed matrimony (middle and lower right).

By Brian Saner-Lamken

Fans of DC Comics' Silver Age know that Lois and Clark have been married plenty of times before — most frequently during the 1960s, in that endearing subgenre of super-hero sagas known as the Imaginary Story. Here, as a public service, CBG offers a survey of the pair's previous partnerships. Spoilers ahoy!

The very first "imaginary story," "Mr. and Mrs. Clark (Superman) Kent," appeared in Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #19 (Aug 60). In it, Superman revealed his secret identity to Lois and then proposed, concluding that Lois wouldn't run the risk of being harmed by his enemies if he married her as Clark; unfortunately, at every turn, Lois encountered comments about her having settled for a mild-mannered reporter — "Poor thing! She's marrying Clark Kent because she couldn't land Superman!" — and only a super-kiss could wipe the tears away.

Superman co-creator Jerry Siegel, who wrote the tale, and Kurt Schaffenberger, who drew it, returned to its premise in the following issue — and again in Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #23 (Feb 61) for "The Wife of Superman" in which Lois and Clark had two super-kids, Larry and Carole. Then, in Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #25 (May 61), they turned the tables: "Lois Lane and Superman, Newlyweds" related what would happen if the world knew about the Man of Steel's marriage; after some close calls with the underworld, Lois had to spend her time locked up in an intruder-proof house, venturing out only in an impenetrable bubblemobile that made her the laughingstock of Metropolis.

Larry and Carole showed up again in Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #36 (Oct 62) for "Lana Lang's Romance with Superman III." In this variation, Superman married Lois publicly after finding a way to give her super-powers; their domestic bliss was clouded, however, by Lana Lang's broken heart — so it was a good thing for all concerned when Lana ended up in the future, falling mutually in love with the Superman of that era, who, according to the laws of Silver Age genetics, was the spitting image of his great-great-great-grandad.

One of the best-known and most-reprinted "imaginary stories" is "The Amazing Story of Superman-Red and Superman Blue," originally published in Superman #162 (Jul 63) and featuring the classic art team of Curt Swan and George Klein. Writer Leo Dorfman had Superman split himself in two to better fulfill his super-heroic mandate: enlarging the bottle-city of Kandor, relocating the Atlanteans to a world made of water, and sending out "anti-crime rays" from Earth's orbit to eradicate evil urges planetwide.

His twin existence as Superman-Red and Superman-Blue (so named for the differences in the twins' new costumes) also allowed him — I mean them — to marry both Lois Lane and Lana Lang. Blue married Lana and remained on Earth, where he devoted his life to science; Red married Lois and relocated to New Krypton, home of the former Kandorians. Each couple had two kids and, as the story ended, seemed poised to live happily ever after.

Among the "imaginary stories" that not only speculated upon the future but also changed the past were "Clark Kent's Brother" (in which Lex Luthor was adopted by the Kents and became Superman's secret partner) and "The New Superman and Batman Team" (in which Lex became Superman himself). Yes, Lois married Clark in both tales — from Superman #175 (Feb 65) and World's Finest #167 (Jun 67), respectively — but the latter had an added twist: It was Lex who worked as a mild-mannered Metropolitan reporter as a front for his other identity, pining for Lois all the while. Clark had taken up the role of millionaire playboy in Gotham City after inheriting his uncle's fortune and was secretly Batman. What had happened to Bruce Wayne in this might-have-been world wasn't revealed, but one would suspect that he went bald and turned to a life of crime.

Bruce did appear in "The Sons of Superman and Batman" in World's Finest #154 (Dec 65), wherein he and Clark got hitched in a dual ceremony that involved a Kent, a Wayne, a Lane, and a Kane (Kathy Kane, the former Batwoman). Sadly, the next generation proved less harmonious, as Clark and Bruce's little boys bickered over whose dad was better. Other stories dealing with a married Superman and Batman followed, but in these, Mrs. Kent and Mrs. Wayne usually went faceless.

For a truly wild ride, check out the two-part novel that began as "Clark Kent's Super-Son" in Superman #192 (Jan 67) and continued two issues later: Clark lost his powers and forgot his Superman identity, wooed and won Lois, and got lost while on assignment in Tibet — only to return home years later to find himself the father of a bullet-proof baby boy. His memory returned later still, but, before he could share the news with his family, he and Lois were captured by Lex Luthor. More surprises followed, and in a rare show of restraint I won't so much as print the second half's title. You should really

The near misses of the near-Mrs. Superman

By Brian Saner-Lamken

Lois Lane would never have landed the Last Son of Krypton in so many of DC's Imaginary Stories had the couple's courtship not already been a favorite focal point for editors and readers alike.

Often, Lois' lack of super-powers was portrayed as the paramount obstacle to a super-wedding. Superman reasoned that his enemies could strike at him too easily through Lois — as if they hadn't resorted to doing so already.

At times, if only briefly, the obstacle of Lois' vulnerability was removed: "Lois! Those bullets are bouncing off you! You're super — like me!" exclaimed the Man of Steel on the cover of Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #78 (Oct 67). "Right, Superman!" Lois replied. "Now when do we get married?"

And at times, the tables were turned: Lois gloated, on the cover of Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #85 (Aug 68), "This boulder can destroy you, Superman, but to me it's as harmless as a soap bubble! Because now I'm more super than you!" A suddenly inferior Superman could only respond, "Great, Lois! Now heave that rock into space ... then we'll start planning our wedding!"

On more than one occasion, Superman really did marry Lois in what passed for DC continuity during the Silver Age, but a plot twist always arrived in time to salvage the status quo.

Take, for example, "The Tragic Fate of the Superman Sweethearts" in Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #82 (Apr 68): Lois travelled to the future, where it seemed that her marriage to Superman was a matter of history; records also showed, however, that the two of them died on their honeymoon. After returning to her own time, she nervously exchanged vows with her big blue beau, only to find it all coming true — so she asked her new hubby for an annulment to save their lives. "All right ... For the time being!" Superman told her. "But I have plans, darling! The next marriage will be for keeps!" Yeah, sure. And Krypto was a cocker spaniel.

A one-stop shopping source for matrimonial mayhem was Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #86 (Oct 68), the giant "All-Wedding Issue" — which, outside of a few Imaginary Stories, never actually made it beyond close calls.

One very close call was "Lois Lane's Wedding Day." Clark agreed to pose as Lois' fiancé for a story. Things backfired, however, and, before realizing that their marriage wasn't legitimate (they took their vows under false pretenses, using aliases), he spent their honeymoon trying to convince Lois that he really was the Man of Steel. That Superman. What a kidder.

Of course, 1980's Superman II — the second of four films in which Lois and Clark were played by Margot Kidder and the indomitable Christopher Reeve — proved itself as sneaky as any Silver Age set piece: Lois discovered that Clark was really Superman, Clark renounced his powers permanently in order to marry her, the two took a little roll in the Fortress, Clark got his powers back in order to kick some Phantom Zone fannies, and Lois' memory of the whole shebang was erased with an amnesia-inducing super-smooch. That Kidder. What a Lois.

Imaginary Stories featuring super-offspring include: "Clark Kent's Super-Son" (Superman #192, Jan 67, above and at far right) which included an aside to the readers from Batman and Superwoman (near right).

Criminals prenatally increased the I.Q. of Superman and Lois' son in "Beware the Super-Genius Baby" (Superman #224, Feb 70, lower right).

Engagements (or refusals of same) also figured prominently in such non-Imaginary Stories as those shown on the covers of Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #63 and 69 (Feb and Oct 66, respectively, below).

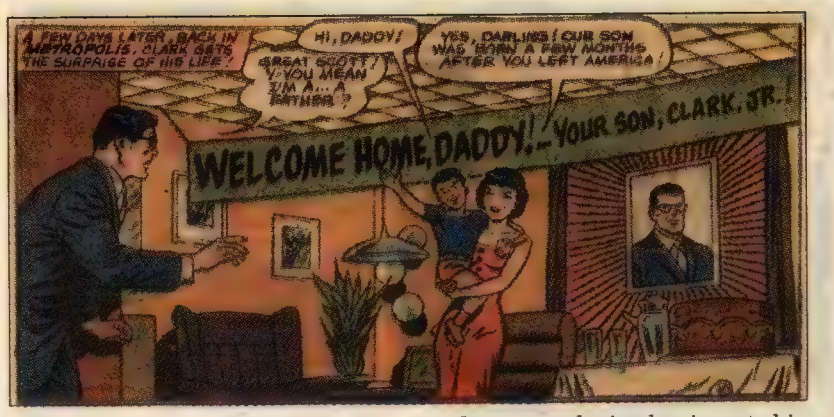
track it down for yourself. Speaking of restraint, however, if you're wondering why some of Clark's caped compatriots didn't clue him in to his own secret identity after Superman's prolonged absence in this tale, I offer the following excerpt:

Batman: "Psst, Superwoman! We're the only ones here who are aware that Clark Kent is Superman!"

Superwoman (the former Supergirl): "Of course, Batman, but we agreed that we'd never reveal the truth to Clark because ... (on the next page) Because you see, readers, that would ruin this Imaginary Story!"



Is that nobility or what?

Possibly the most twisted "imaginary story" ever published was "Lois Lane ... Dead ... Yet Alive" in Superman #215 (Apr 69). It dealt with Superman's situation after his beloved wife Lois had been disintegrated by an enemy's raygun (through an open window in the couple's suburban home, no less — so much for those security precautions). For a time, he freakishly fell for a Lois robot that he created to mother his and Lois' daughter, Laney — "Has Superman slipped a super-cog? He's treating the robot as if she were the real Lois!" — but his eventual solution was to wed the Lois Lane of a parallel Earth without ever clueing her in as to his and Laney's real origins. Otto Binder wrote it, Curt Swan and Jack Abel drew it, and it thoroughly creeped me out.

Shortly before The Man of Steel broke loose into a new decade, Superman #224 (Feb 70) offered up "Beware the Super-Genius Baby." Lois surprised Superman on the night of their first wedding anniversary with "a terrific yen for strawberries, pickles, and ice cream," and you know what that means. But what showed up months later wasn't the "beautiful blonde" of whom Lois dreamt, nor the "husky, black-haired kid" in her husband's thoughts. It was a bald, cranially overendowed little boy who was kept hidden from the couple's well-intentioned but curious neighbors. The infant was speaking within a week and proving Einstein wrong within two, all thanks to the dastardly plotting of an evil professor who affected Junior in utero. It was a bizarre story, but some of the genius kid's lines were precious.

If you're looking to build a scrapbook of these might-have-been marriages, happily, it needn't be too costly. Two of them — "The Wife of Superman" and "Lana Lang's Romance with Superman III" (retitled "... with Superman VI" after somebody did the math) — are in Superman's Girlfriend Lois Lane #86, alias 80-Page Giant #G-51 (Oct 68). Five more — "Mr. and Mrs. Clark (Superman) Kent," "Lois Lane and Superman, Newlyweds," "The Amazing Story of Superman-Red and Superman-Blue," "The New Superman and Batman Team," and "Lois Lane ... Dead ... Yet Alive" — appeared in The Best of DC #19 (Dec 81), a digest-sized delight. Additionally, "Red/Blue" can be found in DC 100-Page Super-Spectacular #DC-18 (Jul 73) and the trade-paperback collection The Greatest Superman Stories Ever Told (1987, ISBN 0930289-39-0).

No survey such as this would be complete, of course, without mention of the more recent "Whatever Happened to the Man of Tomorrow?" from Superman #423 and Action Comics #583 (Sept 86). This was the ultimate "imaginary story," written by Alan Moore (who wrote "Aren't They All Imaginary?") and drawn by Curt Swan, George Pérez, and Murphy Anderson in tribute to those tales of times past that never truly happened — but then, again, did.

It's a stirring tribute, indeed.

The author of this article would like to thank his imaginary friends Craig Shutt and Mark Waid for some last-minute research assistance. You geezers are the most!

Underdog's history is chock full of mystery

By Jack Abramowitz

Comics fans love a mystery. Who is The Sandman's missing brother? What are Cable's secret roots? Who is Shadowhawk? The best kind of mystery is the type that slowly unravels over time. However, it can be annoying when a riddle surrounding a character continues indefinitely. (I have long since stopped wondering — or caring — whether "Logan" was Wolverine's first or last name.) There is one character, however, whose long-standing and profound mysteries only intensify the mystique surrounding the nature of his powers and origins, while enhancing the glamor of America's premiere mutt super-hero. I refer, of course, to the incomparable Underdog.

I present herein some of the questions regarding our hero, along with my own suggested (but purely speculative) explanations.

Mystery: Why are Shoeshine Boy, Sweet Polly Purebred, and the villainous Riff Raff the only anthropomorphic dogs in a world of humans? Furthermore, why does this not seem to surprise or bother anybody?

Hypotheses: A. Perhaps it's something like Alien Nation. A small ship of canine extraterrestrials landed on Earth and became assimilated into our culture. Everybody grew used to them and nobody thinks twice about them any more.

B. Some now-banned drug taken by women during pregnancy distorted their offspring's features, but everybody is polite enough not to mention their disfigurement.

Mystery: Did his parents really name him "Shoeshine Boy?" That kind of dooms him to a particular career choice.

Hypothesis: If we assume that Underdog is really an alien, then, like Ford Prefect of The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, he may just have made an unfortunate selection of an Earth moniker. More likely, his name is something unremarkable like "Fred Smith" or some such. Everybody calls him "Shoeshine Boy" because, while they're polite enough not to comment on his dog-like features, they can still be pretty condescending about his choice of occupation.

Mystery: Why does he call himself "Underdog"? The name implies weakness and adversity, not traits normally associated with the World's Mightiest Mort — uh, Dog.

Hypothesis: Perhaps he's had a rough life, overcoming many hardships to become the hero he is. The name "Underdog" keeps him from forgetting his roots. Or maybe his "Shoeshine Boy" guise isn't just a meek and mild facade; he may actually be modest, shunning names with such adjectives as "wonder," "power," and similarly egocentric themes. Or, as with his "Shoeshine Boy" identity, he may just be really bad at picking names for himself.

Mystery: Why are Underdog, Sweet Polly, and Riff Raff fully clothed while Shoeshine Boy is naked except for his vest?

Hypothesis: If they are, in fact, aliens, they might not possess our nudity taboo. In that case, Shoeshine's state of undress might be their natural state, while Riff and Polly overdress in order to better conform with the natives. Or perhaps it's to protect his secret identity. Since Underdog does not wear a mask (and there aren't that many dog-people in the population), when disguised as Shoeshine Boy, he doesn't wear pants. This distracts people from looking at his face.

Mystery: Where did Shoeshine Boy get a super energy pill formula? For that matter, how does he make the pills?

Hypothesis: Surprisingly, our alien premise fails us here. If the pills were a standard extraterrestrial ration, Sweet Polly and other dog aliens would have access to them or at least be aware of their existence. Therefore, whether of Earthly or otherworldly origin, the pills represent a secret technology not known to the general populace.

Unless his father was a scientist (or some comparable scenario), Shoeshine would presumably not have access to so powerful a formula. (Surely, he could not have concocted it himself.) I speculate that Underdog's ring, where he ostensibly stores the pills, actually manufactures them. The ring, therefore, must have been given to him by a wizard or other mysterious benefactor. (I would not rule out the possibility that anthropomorphic, time-traveling canine Mr. Peabody is the inventor of the super energy pill formula. He's a dog, he doesn't wear pants, and he did invent the WABAK — "Way Back" — Machine.)

Mystery: Why does Underdog speak in verse? (Sometimes better, sometimes worse?)

Hypothesis: When he tries to control it, it is no use,

It's a side effect of energy pill abuse.

Mystery: Who's stronger: Underdog or Mighty Mouse?

Hypothesis: Sorry, Undie, my money's on the rodent. Size isn't everything. Mighty has strength, speed, and agility all over the pooch. But this is one mystery that won't be resolved for sure until the Leonardo vs. Terrytoons/Terrytoons vs. Leonardo mini-series.

Dear Mr. Silver Age,
Can Hawkman fly without his wings?

Warren W. III
Westchester County, N.Y.

Mr. Silver Age says: You bet, Warren.

The wings only provided flight guidance, and he could flap them if he needed to disperse fog or something.

His flying ability came from the X-shaped Thanagarian anti-gravity belt he wore across his chest, which he controlled from the hawk-headed logo in the middle. Hawkgirl wore a similar device as a belt, a styling modification I'm sure she appreciated.

A good example of how this worked appeared in "Battle of the Bird-Man Bandits!" the back-up story in Hawkman #8 (Jun-Jul 65).

During an attempt to free Hawkgirl from the title bad guys, Hawkman's wings were blasted from his back. Using the up/down limitations that imposed, he shot straight up at two of them and punched their lights out. Then he grabbed two others by the claws and rammed them into the space ship hovering overhead.

Turning around, he spotted their female companion pushing Shayera out the ship's door without her wings or her belt. Hovering over the ship, Hawkman used his anti-gravity belt to dive past the falling Hawkgirl to try to grab her.

How the belt let him do this is beyond me. In fact, it was probably beyond Galileo, who proved that all objects fall at the same rate, no matter how heavy they are. I'm sure you remember that from your science classes, right?

Fortunately, being Thanagarian, Katar didn't know about Galileo. Either that or his belt negated gravity right past zero and into negative Gs. Unfortunately, when he caught up to his wife, he missed her. Oops.

Fortunately, he continued to fall faster than she did and wound up gaining so much time that he could pull himself out of his dive near the ground, run to the spot where she was still falling, fly up under her, catch her, and slowly lower her to the ground. Whew!

"The awesome impact drives Hawkman backward," the caption (and our extensive physics knowledge) told us, "but the gravity controls save him from a near-fatal crash, as his arms tighten about his precious burden to hold her safe."

Frankly, the panel showed him holding her like a sack of potatoes, but he apparently did a pretty good job of cushioning critical joints. That included her neck, a really important thing to protect during a fall — as Spider-Man would later learn from the Green Goblin, a major fan of physics.

"How the belt let him do this is beyond me. In fact, it was probably beyond Galileo, who proved that all objects fall at the same rate, no matter how heavy they are."
— Craig Shutt

The winged(less) wonders

Hawkman shows that it isn't the wings that make the man when he saves Hawkgirl from becoming a spot on the pavement in "Battle of the Bird-Man Bandits!" in Hawkman #8 (Jun-Jul 65). Just don't ask how he uses those wings to steer, OK?

When Barry Allen was too fast

By Craig Shutt

Dear Mr. Silver Age,

Wally West once used Johnny Quick's speed formula to increase his speed. How come Barry Allen never thought of something that smart?

Bart A.
Manchester, Ala.

Mr. Silver Age says: Don't go dissing the Silver Age Flash's ingenuity, you young whippersnapper. Pick on his hairstyle if you must, make fun of his bow tie if you want a chuckle. But when it comes to being the brains of the Flash outfit, Saint Barry of Allen took a back seat to nobody.

In fact, Barry tried a similar stunt using the catalyst that created The Main Man, Jay Garrick. On "The Day Flash Ran away with Himself!" in The Flash #154 (Aug 65), Barry discovered he suffered for the first (and only) time from an occupational hazard. His body suddenly sped up in reaction to his constant demands for super-speed, and he couldn't make himself slow down when he punched out bad guys.

Stealing a page from Jay Garrick's book, Barry Allen tried sniffing some hard water fumes in "The Day Flash Ran away with Himself!" in The Flash #154 (Aug 65). Too bad he didn't think to try Johnny Quick's formula instead.

Our boy sped over to the Research Institute, which sometimes helped him with this kind of stuff.

Among the experiments he tried was inhaling hard-water fumes. He figured since that had given Jay his powers, it might remove his excess speed. Hey, I don't follow the logic either, but he's the scientist, not me. I don't even know what hard water is, let alone what it smells like.

Sadly, Barry learned that his body was immune to those gases, but that didn't bother him so much.

"When it came to handicaps," he said, "I've been more fortunate than some of my fellow Justice League members! The Martian Manhunter continually has to find clever ways to overcome his weakness, fire. Green Lantern has to battle against yellow, Superman against magic and kryptonite. Those super-heroes didn't quit under pressure and neither will I!"

What a guy! In fact, his biggest problem was keeping his excess speed a secret from his sweetie, Iris. She was trying to take his picture, and he was vibrating so fast as Barry that he was invisible on the film.

She wanted his picture, I might add, because he'd just won a chemistry award in his job as a police scientist. I daresay it's gonna be a while before another Flash does that.

How's That Again?

The hobby horse is so named because in old England a folk dance was done with the figure of a horse attached to the waist.

DELL FILE COPIES: As always, these books remain stunning to behold with their vibrant colors & gloss. We used to refer to these as "NM/M", but I generally use VF/NM. As with most of the Dell files, tanning or browning on the inside cover edges appears but rarely detracts from the beauty of these books. We are proud to offer a small assortment of low to middle number four-colors to our long-time customers, as well as new customers from CBG.

Enjoy! Gene Carpenter

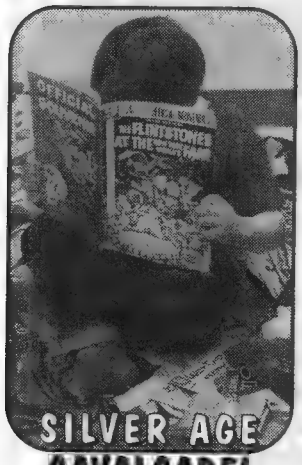
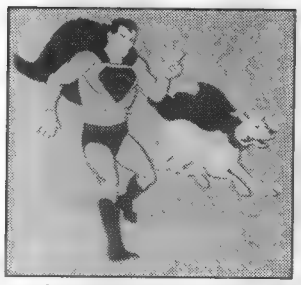
From comics to the camera: Four-color heroes on film and TV





Superboy and Krypto appeared in back-up segments on The Superman/ Aquaman Hour*.*

While The Super Friends featured the core group of Superman, Batman, Robin, Wonder Woman, and Aquaman in its early episodes, cameos by other DC characters such as The Flash and Green Lantern led to the inclusion of other heroes (and some familiar villains) as the series continued.

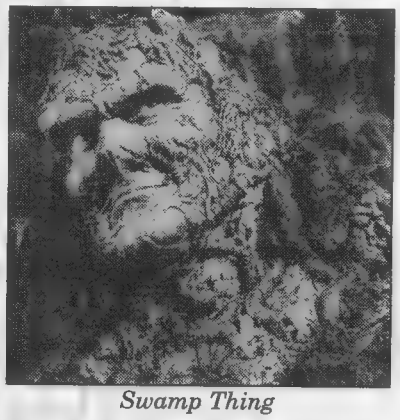
In the mid-'80s, Cyborg of The New Teen Titans and Firestorm (above) became regular members on the show at about the same time that Firestorm was admitted to the Justice League of America in the comics.

By John L. Lavernoich

Everybody knows Superman, Batman, and Wonder Woman — not only in the comic books, but from their years of popularity in mass media.

Superman has had: a long-running radio series; several TV series, both live-action and animated (including Adventures of Superman and Lois & Clark: The New Adventures of Superman); two movie serials; and several feature films. Batman starred in two movie serials, several TV series (including the '60s TV series and the '90s animated series), and several feature films (including this summer's Batman & Robin). Wonder Woman had her own TV series in the '70s, along with regular appearances on Super Friends. And let's not forget Captain Marvel; he starred in a 1941 movie serial and a TV series in the '70s. Nor should we neglect Swamp Thing, who starred in two movies and a TV series.



Swamp Thing

But what about some of their lesser-known contemporaries?

Aviator Hop Harrigan, a regular feature in All-American Comics throughout the '40s, is one of those comic-book characters that is hardly remembered today — but Hop was hot during the '40s, with a popular radio show that ran on several radio networks from 1942 to 1948 and a 1946 movie serial. The serial was produced for Columbia by B-movie producer Sam Katzman. Columbia may have been one of Hollywood's greatest film studios — but its movie serials lacked the imagination and quality that ensured the success of Republic's serials.

Katzman's next movie serial featuring a DC character was The Vigilante (1947), based on the motorcycle-riding cowboy who made his debut in Action Comics #42 (Nov 41). Ralph Byrd, who played Dick Tracy in movies and on TV, played the title role.

Another Action Comics regular who made it to the big screen was Congo Bill, who starred in a 1948 self-titled movie serial — again, produced by Katzman. Katzman was nicknamed "Jungle Sam" — which may explain why he got to produce the serial. Don McGuire played Congo Bill — McGuire would later become a writer-director, working with Jerry Lewis on several of his films. Congo Bill's creator, one-time DC editor Whitney Ellsworth, would later produce the Adventures of Superman series in the '50s.

One of the last comic-book heroes to appear in a movie serial — and one of the last ever — was 1952's Blackhawk, based on the Quality hero created by Will Eisner. It would take an actor who played a man of steel to play a pilot with nerves of steel — in this case, it was Kirk Alyn (who had played Superman in both movie serials featuring the Man of Steel in 1948 and 1950 — and who got the role of Blackhawk). The film's foe? Carol Foreman, who played Spider Lady in 1948's Superman. By the time Katzman was finished producing Blackhawk, movie serials were on the decline. Four years after Blackhawk was released, Quality shut down and sold Blackhawk and the rest of its characters to DC. With the exception of Superman in the '50s, there would be no comics super-heroes on either the big or small screens for more than a decade.

By 1966, Batman was wowing TV viewers with his campy TV series, and Superman returned to TV in an animated TV series on Saturday mornings — leading to renewed interest in animated superheroes.

In 1967, Aquaman made his TV debut as part of The Superman/Aquaman Hour on CBS. Aquaman (voiced by Marvin Miller) starred in his own segment, protecting the Seven Seas with the aid of Aqualad, in scripts written by DC veterans Bob Haney and George Kashdan. The Aquaman segments from Superman/ Aquaman were later shown in a separate Aquaman series in 1968.

When Super Friends made its debut in 1973, Aquaman became a regular through the show's various formats throughout the '70s and '80s.

Another DC super-hero who first appeared on Superman/ Aquaman was The Flash — not Jay Garrick the original Flash or Wally West the current Flash — but Barry Allen, the Scarlet Speedster who first appeared in Showcase #4 (Sep-Oct 56). In his Superman/Aquaman appearances, he either went solo or teamed with Kid Flash or The Justice League.

The Flash would later appear on various episodes of Super Friends throughout the '70s and '80s, as well as the two-part Legends of the Super-Heroes special that was broadcast on NBC in 1979. Finally, in 1990, The Flash got his own prime-time series on CBS, with soap-opera star John Wesley Shipp playing The Fastest Man Alive and employing the talents of producers Danny Bilson and Paul De Meo, writer/artist Howard Chaykin, and composer Danny Elfman. CBS had hoped that The Flash might give NBC's Cosby Show a run for its money — but not only did Bill Cosby beat The Flash in the ratings, but Fox's The Simpsons, which moved to Thursday nights in the fall of 1990 did, as well.

Other DC super-heroes who appeared on Superman/Aquaman included Green Lantern, The Atom, and Hawkman, who would eventually find their way into the Super Friends TV series (as did Green Arrow in a 1973 episode) — and the aforementioned Legends of the Super-Heroes TV special, which also marked the TV debuts of Black Canary and The Huntress. The original Teen Titans (minus Robin) also appeared on Superman/Aquaman. There were plans to produce a TV series based on the then-popular New Teen Titans comic book in the '80s, but they never got past the development stage, although Cyborg did appear on the last two seasons of Super Friends in 1984-86, along with another young DC hero, Firestorm — not to mention Jack Kirby's New Gods characters.

Plastic Man, a Quality hero who had been bought by DC in 1956, made his TV debut on a 1973 episode of Super Friends, but it wasn't until 1979, when ABC and Ruby-Spears awarded Plas his own TV series, which lasted for two seasons. The last season introduced his son "Baby Plas," and Plastic Man's TV show was a far cry from Jack Cole's original concept — although the TV show did rely on humor. (Ruby-Spears eventually produced the 1988 Superman TV show.)

Supergirl tried to achieve movie stardom in a 1984 film produced by Alexander and Ilya Salkind. But not even star Helen Slater, who played The Girl of Steel, could save the film — nor co-stars Faye Dunaway and Mia Farrow. Supergirl died at the box office a year before the comic-book version was killed in Crisis on Infinite Earths #7 (Oct 85). (A new version appeared in 1988.)

Even The Human Target had his own TV show in 1991 — but not even series star Rick Springfield could draw viewers to the show.

Len Wein and Carmine Infantino's crime-fighting disguise expert may have his devoted fans — but the fact that Christopher Chance lacked the star power of Superman or Batman may explain why The Human Target isn't on the air any more.

Zatanna and Jonah Hex have guest-starred on Batman: The Animated Series — and Lobo has appeared in two episodes of the new Superman animated series.

This summer, Steel comes to the big screen, with pro basketball star Shaquille O'Neal in the title role.

Whether other DC stars will make their screen debuts any time depends on Superman and Batman staying alive in the show business arena. Keep an eye on TV schedules.

The Superman/Aquaman Hour featured the first animated adventures of a number of other DC heroes, including most of the '60s Justice League members and The Teen Titans.

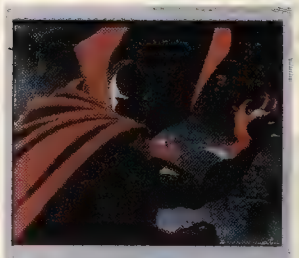
'Spawn' spawns HBO animated series



"To believe that these kinds of things happen ... is believable in some kind of odd, twisted, look-in-the-shadows kind of way."
— Alan McElroy

An animated version of Spawn, based on Todd McFarlane's comic-book series and the first production from HBO's new animation division, is scheduled to premiere on the pay cable channel Friday, May 16.

Six episodes have been produced to air at midnight ET on Friday late night schedules. They are tentatively scheduled to repeat in September with plans for six more new episodes in 1998. Spawn, like HBO's other new production, Ralph Bakshi's Spicy City, will not be designed for children and will contain sexual references, violence, and strong language.

HBO Original Programming President Chris Albrecht said, "Traditionally in the area of animation, HBO has produced family fare. HBO Animation will explore the largely untapped field of adult-oriented animation, allowing off-beat creative talents the kind of unrestricted freedom that's rare on television. This new programming division will continue the tradition of innovative entertainment HBO has become known for."

HBO Animation Vice President and Spawn Producer Catherine Winder said, "HBO gives us the creative freedom and flexibility to tell the kind of story that Todd really wanted to tell. It is R-rated and it's pretty heavy stuff, and no one's asked us to pull back.

"Everything we're doing on this series is breaking new ground."

McFarlane is executive producer of the animated series. Alan McElroy, the series' chief writer as well as the writer of the upcoming Spawn live-action film, is co-executive producer. Eric Radomski, a producer of Fox's animated Batman series, is supervising director.

McElroy and Radomski said they were pleased with the R-rated aspects of Spawn.

McElroy said, "We wanted to write something that is R-rated. It just happens to be animated but it could be live-action, as far as we're concerned. We wanted to have all the violence and sexuality and language — really go to the edge and try to see how far we could push it."

Radomski added, "When I have a fight in an alley, I want a guy to get punched in the face and I want him to bleed. We're appealing to a more adult audience. It's HBO, it's late night, and people want their money's worth. It's just so refreshing to get away from that cookie-cutter mentality and do something original."

Here's how HBO described the series' premise:

"Spawn tells the story of Al Simmons, an African-American employee of the U.S. government who is killed 'in the line of duty' while working as a CIA assassin. Being completely devoted to his wife Wanda, Al sells his soul to the devil Malebolgia in exchange for a second chance on Earth. What Al doesn't foresee is that Malebolgia has sent him five years into the future, with no memories, and in the unrecognizable form of a 'hell spawn' with superhuman powers.

"In addition to Spawn, some of the characters in the series include: Cogliostro, a derelict whose wisdom guides the tormented Spawn; Clown, a wise-cracking dwarf with a hellish secret; Sam Burke and Twitch Williams, detectives tracking a bloody trail; Jason Wynn, a cold-hearted CIA chief and Al's old boss; Billy Kincaid, the neighborhood ice cream man who dishes out death for desert; and Angela, the beautiful slayer of hell's agents."

The series' creators insist that Spawn is not a super-hero show.

McElroy said, "I can buy Spawn more than I can buy stories about some guy with super powers. The battle between good and evil and heaven and Hell — all of that — is something that we all have grown up with. To believe that these kinds of things happen — there are demons with a hierarchy, that there are armies, that these forces are always in flux, always fighting each other — is believable in some kind of odd, twisted, look-in-the-shadows kind of way.

"For that reason, it's more about a guy who is wrestling with morals and ethics deep in his own soul, a guy who was an assassin but thought he was doing what was needed. Upon his judgement, he went to Hell. And still at the core was the one burning love — his love for his wife Wanda. And that's what he would sell anything for to come back.

"Now, he's got to answer these questions of darkness and light and good and evil with a soul that appears to already have been damned. But, even because it's damned, he's still willing to fight for what he believes in, not what Malebolgia or Clown or anybody else is trying to force him to do. Not even Cogliostro. Al Simmons will do what Al Simmons believes in, not what anybody else is trying to tell him.

"That's what most of the series is about: forces trying to make him do things he won't do."

Radomski said that the show's look will be dark, even darker than his work on Batman. "Black is where this show is. It's got huge swatches of black, even more so than Todd does in his comics. Sometimes the screen is 75% a big black swatch and you're looking to the color section. That was a very intentional approach to the direction of the show. It creates more mystery and, if composed properly, it's more interesting to look at than a fully rendered scene that doesn't have a whole lot to say."

Radomski added that the series will be as faithful to the comic book in visual presentation as animation will allow. "We tried to stay as true as we could to the comic book as far as that Todd's style holds a lot of specific detail. He really likes lots of line work and a real gritty sort of feel to the overall presentation — it's got an overall grimy feel.

"To maintain that in an animated series is always a challenge, because you don't want to drive the animators crazy. The additional linework makes twice as much animation work. It just makes the production more difficult, and you want to have some decent animation."

The cast of the series features Keith David (Clockers, Dead Presidents) as the voice of Spawn. He previously voiced Goliath on Gargoyles and Black Panther on Fantastic Four. Richard Dysart from L.A. Law voices Cogliostro.

The cast also includes Victor Loe as Terry Fitzgerald, Dominique Jennings as Wanda Blake, John Rafter Lee as Jason Wynn, Michael Nocolisi as Clown, Jamie Hanes as Overkill and Violator, Ruben Santiago Hudson as Chapel, Denise Poirior as Angela, Jimmy Keane as Tony Twist, Ronny Cox as Billy Kincaid and Senator MacMillan, and Michael McShane as Twitch and Gareb.

Shirley Walker, who did music for The Flash live-action TV show and the Batman and Superman animated series, is the musical director of Spawn.

Work on the next six episodes of Spawn has already begun. Television veteran Larry Brody, who is also working on the new Silver Surfer series, has been brought in to work on the second set.

Radomski said, "This could really be a breakthrough series. It's exciting to be working on something like this."

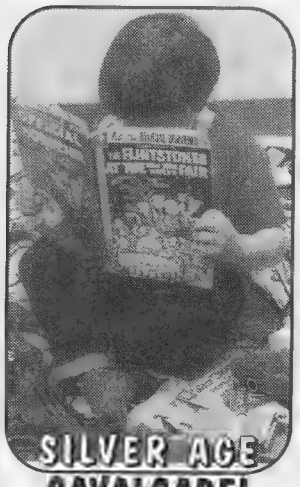
Dear Mr. Silver Age,

You told us about how Lois Lane first fell in love with Superman, so how about that big Marvel love-fest: When did Peter Parker fall in love with Gwen Stacy?

Mary Jane W.
Long Island



Mr. Silver Age says: He probably realized he'd hit the jackpot the first time he laid eyes on her, if you know what I mean, M.J. But he finally admitted it to himself amid the usual soap opera swirling around him in "O, Bitter Victory!" in Amazing Spider-Man #60 (May 68).

In that ish, Spidey broke in on The Brainwasher as he was putting Gwen's dad, Capt. George Stacy, under his mind-mesmerizing thingamajig. The mastermind of this turned out to be The Kingpin, and he showed up and forced Spidey to retreat, while the captain got hypnotized into doing the Kingpin's bidding.

Dazed and beaten, Peter staggered back to his apartment, where he had a nightmare about the Captain and The Kingpin teaming up to defeat him. "How?" he moaned in his sleep. "How do I treat Gwen's dad as an enemy? How can I battle the father of the girl I ... I love?"

Pete and Gwen, sitting in a tree

Peter Parker had a terrible nightmare in "O, Bitter Victory!" in Amazing Spider-Man #60 (May 68). But at least something good came out of it, as Pete finally admitted what we'd all known for ages: He was kinda stuck on that Stacy babe.

Peter sat bolt upright in bed. "The girl I love!" he exclaimed. "It's the first time I ever admitted it to myself!" As if it took the rest of us by surprise, right?

Troubled by Capt. Stacy's plight, Peter drove to Gwen's house, where he asked to speak to her dad alone. Still under The Kingpin's influence, the captain attacked Peter, and Peter knocked him to the floor. Just then, Gwen entered (of course), putting a definite kibosh on our duo's romantic plans for that evening.

Heartbroken over what was happening to Gwen's father, Peter followed him and took some photos of the captain helping The Kingpin. Then he sold the photos to Jameson, in the hope that they would force Stacy's problems into the open. Pretty tough love, if you ask me.

Needless to say, Gwen wasn't thrilled to open her Bugle to the front page the next day and see photos of her father stealing top-secret data, courtesy of photographer Peter Parker.

Things were a little rocky between our lovebirds for a while after that, to say the least. But the captain finally got straightened out, even if our star-crossed lovers didn't.

Our coosome twosome were still on the outs when "The Madness of Mysterio!" struck in Amazing Spider-Man #66 (Nov 68). Peter was really deep in the dumps by then, because he'd had his usual run of bad luck, resulting in his having to sell his bike. He was starting to feel just a tad bitter when he bumped into Gwen on the street.

"Peter!" she exclaimed. "I've been looking all over for you! I was afraid I'd never find you!" I guess her phone was out of order.

"Gwen!" he replied, startled. "I don't get it! I ... I thought you were through with me!"

Gwen threw herself into his arms, which, I admit, would have lost something over the phone. "Oh no, Peter, no!" she cried. "Dad explained everything! How you weren't to blame for what happened!"

"Gwendy!" Pete beamed. "It's more than I dared to hope! All this time, I've been feeling sorry for myself, unwilling to admit I was just carrying a king-sized torch for you!"

"Oh Peter, Peter!" Gwen sighed. "It was as though my whole world had come to an end! But not any more!"

They went into a world-class clinch. "Suddenly," Peter said. "With you in my arms again, everything seems right again! No matter what happens now, no matter what new problems may come along, they won't mean a thing!"

"Don't talk to me, Parker," Gwen sighed. "Just hold me, so you won't see me cry!"

I just love a happy ending, don't you?

"Things were a little rocky between our lovebirds for a while ... to say the least."

A Silver Age bonus: Peter Parker first met Gwen Stacy in Amazing Spider-Man #31 (Dec 65). Peter's future roommate (among other things) Harry Osborn was also introduced in the issue.

J.D. Salinger called them "two Heaven-sent artists and men." Compliments don't get much better than that.

I have no idea when I first became aware of Laurel and Hardy. When did you first become aware of music? Or chocolate? Or the color orange? Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy were always there, always on TV, always turning up on posters and in ads and wherever the icons of Americana are depicted. Like any good force of nature, they just were. The sun is in the sky, the stars are in the heavens, and Mr. Laurel is alongside Mr. Hardy. It's just that simple.

In 1926, when Mr. Laurel and Mr. Hardy began appearing in films together, neither was what you'd call star material. Stan Laurel had come to America years earlier with the Fred Karno Troupe, a band of British thespians who toured the states with a show called A Night in an English Music Hall.

Mr. Laurel was not even the star of that show. He was the understudy — the guy who went on only when the star was ill. (The star was some guy named Charlie Chaplin.) When the Karno folks returned home, Stan elected to stay and try his luck on the American vaudeville circuit. Eventually, he started making a few comedy shorts with mixed success.

One, intended as a pilot to sell a distributor on a whole series of Stan Laurel comedies, was called "Lucky Dog." The film is remembered today only because, when they needed someone to play a crook, they hired a ubiquitous supporting actor named Oliver Norvell Hardy, sometimes known as "Babe" Hardy. It was their first time together on a screen, but magic did not happen, and the distributors just barely agreed to accept future Stan Laurel comedies. Perhaps, if Laurel had hired Hardy again, things would have been different.

Mr. Laurel headlined in dozens of short comedies but audiences never quite started demanding his two-reelers. In hindsight, it's easy to see why: He hadn't found his ultimate screen character. He wasn't yet that vague little man who scratched his brush-like hairdo, cried when things went wrong, and stumbled through life with eyelids forever at half-mast.

Instead, he was playing the same guy that everyone was playing — a brash young man who eventually triumphed over adversity and got the girl — and he wasn't all that convincing in the role. He tried other characters, other approaches, other studios, all to lukewarm response. Eventually, he drifted from performing to a writing/directing post at the Hal Roach Studio.

Mr. Hardy had been in the moving pictures for years, usually a supporting player, often the villain. He'd entered the business at the retail end, running a theater in his native Georgia. The films he showed were amateurish, even for 1913, and one day he decided that he could be as good — or as bad — as anyone in them. He migrated to Florida, where many silent comedies were then made.

Very round but very nimble on his feet, Norvell Hardy (his name then) could look pretty funny. He was also a tireless worker, extremely dependable, and uncommonly nice. Because of these traits, he worked all the time. Just how many films he made is still an open question; every year or so, some film historian happens upon yet another.

Eventually, as the movie business moved to Hollywood, so did Hardy. Often, he worked in support of lead comics who were not his equal; you can see him stealing picture after picture, often with the teeniest of gestures. Mr. Hardy was the quintessential mime, his every movement perfectly attuned to the scene and situation. Even an insignificant action — ringing a doorbell or signing his name — was always done precisely in character.

And he had the critical skill: He could make you laugh. Some other silent comics were the sum of the gags their writers conceived. Called upon to walk across a room, Harold Lloyd would ask, "What do I do to be funny?" This was a question Hardy never had to ask. He could be funny exhaling.

Mr. Laurel was the better gagman but Mr. Hardy was the better actor. Ollie's rhythms were so infectious that they would eventually spread — first to Laurel, then across the Roach lot, then throughout all of silent comedy. The early pictures had been frenetic farce — lots of running around, racing Model-T Fords, people falling into omnipresent muddy lakes. The Keystone Kops were all interchangeable, their faces nowhere near as important as their gags. Camera operators deliberately undercranked when they filmed it all.

Silent movie projectors ran at variable speeds but most of them clocked in around 24 frames per second. The movies were filmed at 18-20 f.p.s. so that, when projected at 24, the action was sped slightly and given that extra bit of surreal energy.

Others — most notably Buster Keaton and Harry Langdon — started the trend toward normal speed, but no one belonged there more than Mr. Hardy. He and Mr. Laurel brought it all down to near the pace of reality, valuing personality over pies. Most of their films were lensed at 22 f.p.s.

It was then entirely appropriate that Stan and Ollie would be the last great silent comedy stars, and among the few to make it to sound films, wholly unscathed. The advent of sound required that movies be made at normal speed, which didn't bother them at all. They were already at normal speed.

But first they had to team up — a monumental event that took longer than it should have. In 1926, Hal Roach was looking for new comedy stars. He had a roster of wonderful supporting players — folks like Jimmy Finlayson, Mae Busch, Frank Brownlee, and that Hardy fellow — but none who quite made it as featured performers. His biggest success at the time was a series of kid comedies that went under the title of "Our Gang" (later, "The Little Rascals").

The franchise was much envied by other producers who, like Roach, had to cope with actors who became stars and then demanded raises and/or left for greener pastures. Roach never had this problem with "Our Gang." If a kid got out of line, there was a long line of child performers out there, eager to step into the job. Harold Lloyd could go somewhere else and make Harold Lloyd Comedies — and did — but Roach owned the name "Our Gang."

(This is the reason that Laurel and Hardy always went by their legal names on screen. Laurel had made a few shorts as "Hickory Hiram," only to find later that the distributor retained ownership of the handle. Thereafter, Stan Laurel remained Stan Laurel — the one name they couldn't take away from him.)

With "Our Gang" going strong, Roach decided to see if the principle would work with adults. He bundled all those wonderful supporting actors together into a series called the Hal Roach Comedy All-Stars. Hardy was among the players; Laurel was a writer and occasional director.

As the late critic Walter Kerr noted, "all-stars" meant then just what it means now: "no stars." But the films did well enough, and in 1926 Laurel began prepping a comedy called "Get 'Em Young," which was to feature Hardy as a funny butler. All was in readiness when, a day or two before shooting was to start, Hardy had an accident. He was cooking a leg of lamb when scalding gravy splashed on his arm, taking him out of commission.

Stan was persuaded to switch from directing the film to playing the butler, which he did quite well. Before, he'd been concerned with being a leading man and in shouldering the entire burden of carrying the film. Now, in a supporting role, he concentrated on just being

Here's another fine memory ...

Working on this column about Laurel and Hardy by Mark Evanier took me back to my childhood, when I would visit my grandfather in Iowa and watch Laurel and Hardy films every Sunday morning on TV.

I especially enjoyed "Tit for Tat," in which Laurel and Hardy opened a hardware store near a grocery store owned by the very jealous husband of a beautiful woman. After Hardy accidentally found himself in the lady's bedroom, the jealous husband came over to the hardware store and warned Hardy to stay away from his wife, which just egged things on. The boys would go over to the grocery store and cause mischief, which would cause the owner to retailiate, and things continued to escalate from there, to the point where the grocery store owner destroyed a series of hanging lights in the hardware store by swinging one into the next like a series of dominoes (trust me, it's a great sight gag).

Several running gags were featured, including a little man who systematically took items from the hardware store every time the boys would go next door. My favorite gag involved a jar of marshmallows near the door of the grocery store that figured in the short's ending.

Unfortunately, I have been unable to find this particular Laurel and Hardy short on video. I would like to go back and see if it's as funny today as it was all those years ago.

Point of View

funny and so began to home in on the screen character that would soon make him famous.

A man named Richard Jones, now unjustly forgotten in comedy history, ran creative matters for Roach. He saw in Laurel a quality of performance that had not been evident in all those Stan Laurel Comedies. Stan just wanted to return to writing and directing, but Jones bribed him with a raise, keeping him on the other side of the camera forever after. By the time of the next film for the Hal Roach Comedy All-Stars, Mr. Hardy returned to the cast list. Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy were appearing regularly together in films.

But they still were not a team. They often appeared in roles that had nothing to do with each other. For about a dozen "All-Stars" films, they flirted with an on-again, off-again partnership. If you watched them all in sequence today, it would drive you mad: You'd see the film-makers figure out what to do with The Boys in one film, then forget it all in the next few.

In "45 Minutes from Hollywood," they had no scenes together. Then, in the recently rediscovered "Duck Soup" (long thought to be a lost film), they were a functioning team, well on their way to becoming the Stan and Ollie we all know and love. Then they made five more films where they weren't partners. They were just two actors who happened to be in the same movie.

Then came "Do Detectives Think?" which actually looks like a Laurel and Hardy movie: They're the stars, they're teamed, they're even wearing derbies and starting to act like themselves. Laurel is a little too pushy, but you see this film today and you think, "Aha! They finally got it!" But in the next two films they were back to being strangers in the same two-reeler.

Finally, commencing with "The Second Hundred Years," Laurel and Hardy became inseparable, irrevocably developing the characters for which we now know them. Everyone who was working on the Roach lot at the time later took credit for suggesting the marriage, but historians generally accord Leo McCarey that achievement. McCarey was then writing and directing short comedies and would later become an important director of talking pictures, including Going My Way and the Marx Brothers' Duck Soup (no relation to Stan and Ollie's film of the same name).

Roach, however, said he felt that McCarey's role has been overstated. One time when I had the honor of meeting Roach, he said that really, when you got down to it, it was the public that made Laurel and Hardy a team. The films that put the two of them together drew big responses from exhibitors and distributors, Roach told me. "You didn't have to be a genius to see that the fat guy and the skinny guy were funny together." No, you sure didn't.

In 1927, Laurel and Hardy were making silent comedies, blissfully unaware that the form had but a few years to live. These films — most notably "Big Business" and "Two Tars" — are still among the funniest ever made. In them, you can see their characters being refined. You can watch as Mr. Laurel, his pace tempered to match that of Mr. Hardy, becomes increasingly less aggressive, increasingly more the sluggish, amiable follower of his rotund pal.

Studio management didn't want to wait for the duo's hair to grow back in following the filming of 1927's "The Second Hundred Years," a prison picture, so "Call of the Cuckoos" was filmed almost immediately afterward. Oh, and in case you're wondering, the other two players in this picture (from left to right) are Charley Chase and James Finlayson.

Laurel and Hardy set new fashion standards in 1928's "You're Darn Tootin'."

Hardy was Hardy almost from the start of their partnership. The role he would play for the rest of his career was basically a self-caricature; he had only to exaggerate his mannerisms and lower his I.Q. a few points before he was ready to step before the camera.

Laurel, though, was playing his opposite. On-screen, it was Mr. Hardy who provided what little brains there were in the team. When Mr. Laurel starts to go first through a doorway, it is Mr. Hardy who taps him on the shoulder and gestures, "Me before you." And it is, of course, Mr. Hardy who goes ahead through the door, only to have some heavy object fall on his head.

Off-screen, Laurel was the brains of the operation. He was not only an actor, he was head writer and unofficial film editor. He usually collected 50% as much salary as his partner because he put in that many more hours.

In 1929, Mr. Laurel and Mr. Hardy segued to sound films with the appropriately named, "Unaccustomed as We Are." Talking on-screen was traumatic for most stars. Keaton and Lloyd were never the same — Chaplin continued making (mostly) silent films — other careers ended quickly and irrevocably. Stan and Ollie seemed to barely notice the change; it was the most natural thing in the world for them to speak on-screen, and it solidified their characters. They'd already been doing stupid things; now, they could say stupid things, as well.

They made "talkie" shorts for a time, my favorites including "Come Clean," "Me and My Pal," "The Music Box," "Thicker than Water," "Busy Bodies," "Towed in a Hole," "Helpmates," and "Them Thar Hills." Then, as shorts became decreasingly lucrative, they started making features. Most Laurel and Hardy buffs today will argue between Sons of the Desert and Way Out West as their best. I might opt for Our Relations, but I could watch any of them over and over and over. And have.

All of their best films were made for Hal Roach. In 1941, they moved on to larger studios, very much to their own detriment. The Boys' last nine features were not grand, owing to some combination of age, changing cinema tastes, studio mismanagement, and the absence of their old crew of writers and supporting players. Their poorest movie, in my opinion, was their penultimate: When The Bullfighters is on, I am torn between wanting to see my favorite performers and not wanting to see them at their worst.

Their next film, Atoll K, was not much better and, following its release/escape, they never made another movie. Our loss.

They left behind an incredible body of work — timeless comedies that will continue to amuse future generations. Their comedy was based on basic human frailties, and that never dates. I have no doubt that, a hundred years from today, someone will snap a filmcard into a viewing module and will view a computer-restored print of "Blockheads."

And they'll laugh. Oh, how they'll laugh.

I have written in columns past about many famous people I've had the privilege of meeting. Under the equal time provisions, I must divulge to you that I once had the opportunity to meet Stan Laurel and, in one of the dumbest moves in a lifetime of dumb moves, I chickened out. Next week, I will tell you the sad story about how Idiot Evanier didn't meet Stan Laurel. And I'll try to put into words just what he and Mr. Hardy have meant to me.

That address is Idiot Evanier, 363 S. Fairfax Ave., #303, Los Angeles, CA 90036. And here's another nice mess you've gotten me into ...

Motor City madness: Unconventional con launches show season

Motor City Memories

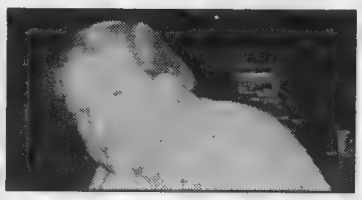
Organizers said 11,100 fans attended the Motor City Comic Con in Novi, Mich., March 21-23. This year's con included a role-playing mini-con; sanctioned card tournaments for Magic: The Gathering, Star Trek, Star Wars, and Dragon Storm; animation screenings; a preview of the Spawn movie; appearances by author Harlan Ellison; and several panel discussions, with an emphasis on science-fiction topics.

Other guests included John Romita Jr., Martin Nodell, Mike Grell, Jim Lee, J. Scott Campbell, Bernie Wrightson, Alex Ross, Dan Brereton, actors Peter Mayhew (Chewbacca), David Prowse (Darth Vader), and Michael Carter (Bib Fortune), special effects artist and actor Tom Savini, screenwriter John Russo, rock group GWAR, and actress Debbie Rochow. A scheduled appearance by "scream queen" Monique Gabrielle was canceled for health reasons.

With the heavy presence of science-fiction and horror personalities, this year's con offered opportunities for the comics field to reach out to other audiences. At the same time, other fields were lured by the promise of grabbing a share of the comics market. Recruitment booths were set up at the con for groups as diverse as The Motion Picture Institute of Michigan and the United States Marines.

A total of $6500 was raised for the Muscular Dystrophy Association by the con's Charity Art Auction. A blood drive for the Red Cross was also held.

Show organizer Gary Bishop said, "Next year's show will feature even more comic presentations, a more extensive gaming and card tournament program, more of the science-fiction and horror aspects, as well as the continued fun that is had by all." The Novi Expo Center will also be the location for the 1998 convention, scheduled for March 27-29.



World-famous writer Harlan Ellison gave a moving reading of his story "Paladin of the Lost Hour" for a standing-room-only audience.

That is, it was standing-room-only until the courteous Ellison personally tracked down more chairs and carried them around to each unseated audience member.

Yes, that is a live Burmese albino python greeting fans in the artists' section. Unfortunately, signings were out of the question. As for the snake's companion, she denied being Princess Python. Nor is she a comics writer, artist, inker, publisher, or letterer. "I just get paid to stand here and play with my snake," she finally explained in response to CBG's relentless interrogation.

Pest Comics honored CBG in typically phlegmatic fashion by constructing a huge nose out of papier-mâché Comics Buyer's Guides.

Con-goers were invited to reach into the giant proboscis and "pick" a prize.

A Motor City testimonial

By Gary Reed
Publisher, Caliber Comics

Well, convention season is starting in earnest, with the Pittsburgh convention and WonderCon in April, soon to be followed by conventions in Atlanta, Charlotte, New York, Toronto, Chicago, and, of course, San Diego. But for us at Caliber, our big convention has already passed — that was the Motor City Convention in late March. I don't think it's a major convention for just Caliber anymore, as Motor City Con has become one of the largest conventions in the country.

Still, Motor City doesn't get a great deal of attention, probably because of the climate — both weather and crime-wise. Well, here's some news for you. The convention is held in Novi, which is closer to Ann Arbor than Detroit. The convention center is in a very upscale suburb and, within half a mile, hundreds of stores, dozens of restaurants, two movie-theater complexes, and four hotels. It's not buried at an airport, and Ann Arbor is only 20 minutes away.

As for the weather, well, Saturday was nearly 60 degrees, but Sunday showcased snow flurries. OK, not everything is perfect. But at least it gave everyone something to talk about Sunday morning, except for those of us who live here and are used to such abrupt weather changes.

The convention itself was a fine show, as usual. Motor City spotlights lots of small-press publishers and attracts lots of dealers with a wide variety of stock, including toys, Silver and Golden Age comics, new stuff, videotapes, books, etc. And, of course, there are the fans. The convention organizers make sure there's plenty of room and arrange space so that there's no sense of being crowded — the aisles are wide. It can be deceptive, looking down and seeing aisles that aren't crowded — but remember, you can fit eight people across them. I think most publishers that come to the show once will make sure that they return. The largest display areas this year were Jim Lee's Wildstorm display and of course, Caliber's. After all, this is our home base. In addition to our booth space, we have another large area that features Caliber creators in their own artists' alley, and I think this year, we featured nearly 30 Caliber creators.

The organizers of the convention are Mike Goldman and Gary Bishop, plus many of Mike's family members, and they treat guests exceptionally well. We work with them to sponsor a party at the convention hotel, which allows the guests, publishers, retailers, and others a chance to get to know each other better away from the bustle of the crowds.

If you haven't made the effort to come to Motor City, put it on your agenda for next year. There are two shows a year; the spring show is the big one. It may not be San Diego or Chicago, but it's a growing show that is rapidly catching up.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Batman # 1 For Sale.

Completely UNRESTORED - UNTOUCHED
(How often do you see that anymore?)

Grades G++ to G/VG. Looks like a nice VG with bright color and great eye appeal, except cover is detached. Minimal restoration (A clean and press, reattach the cover, and seal a couple tears) would make it around Fine. More work would make it VF or better. Or, leave it alone and have one of the few untouched copies under Fine grade.

Historic 1st Batman comic, Origin of Batman, 1st Joker, 1st Catwoman, 1st Batman and Robin pinup (On the back cover), early Robin, and that great posterlike cover.

Terms: Money orders or cashiers checks preferred. Personal checks must clear Returns accepted in same condition within 7 days. Include $5 for postage and insurance under $200 Call to reserve

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($40.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or symbols to Trader ads. The better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

The advertisers' index is provided as a reader service. Occasional last minute changes may result in ads appearing on pages other than those listed here. The publisher assumes no liability for omissions or errors.

GENERAL INFORMATION

A. PAYMENT: Ads must be accompanied by payment. You may pay with a check, money order, or credit card.

B. CREDIT CARDS: We will accept the following credit cards: VISA, MasterCard, American Express, Discover.

C. DEADLINE: For all advertising is 4:00 p.m. each Tuesday, unless otherwise stated on deadline card.

D. TERMS: Cash with copy only. All advertisers must provide information for the confidential use of the publisher should questions arise.

E. CONTRACT RATES are available for 6, 13, 26, or 52 consecutive issues. Contract rates apply to fulfillment of contract items. Cancellation of a contract by the advertiser allows the publisher to reinvoice covered ads at the earned rate. This rate card is a part of the advertising contract.

F. MINORS are required to furnish a statement of responsibility from their parent or guardian before their advertising can be accepted.

G. ERRORS: Typewritten copy is recommended. The publisher is not responsible for errors resulting from long-hand or illegible copy, or changes submitted by telephone. The publisher's liability for any error shall not exceed the cost of the space occupied by that error.

H. LAYOUT and design services are provided by Krause Publications for advertisers who do not submit camera-ready copy. Due to the creative and subjective nature of these services, credit will not be allowed for conceptual variations.

I. GRADING: Items offered in any ad must be properly described as to condition, conforming to the standards set forth in Comics Buyer's Guide Price Guide. Advertisers may also exercise the option of grading offerings by applying a unique personal system, providing the standards applied are detailed in the ad to avoid confusion.

J. RETURN PRIVILEGE: Except as otherwise specified in any ad, an advertiser must accept the return of any merchandise postmarked within ten working days of its receipt by a customer.

K. P.O. BOX ADS are allowed, but the permanent home address, phone number and place of business of the advertiser must be filed with the publisher before advertisements may be printed.

L. SPECIAL PAGE POSITIONS are available at a premium, inquire for details.

M. ADVERTISING AGENCIES: There are no agency discounts.

N. CAMERA READY display ads qualify for a 15% discount. Copy must be ready for camera without additional paste-up or film work required. No charge for reproductions, enlargements or mail response key change. Classified Display, Comics Trader, Collector's Showcase and classified word ads do not qualify for the camera ready discount.

O. SPACE RESERVATIONS available for camera ready ads only. Must be made prior to ad deadline. Reserved space must be paid for even if ad does not arrive on time.

P. PRE-PRINTED INSERTS are available in Comics Buyer's Guide. Inquire for additional information and technical specifications.

Q. CIRCULATION is throughout the United States and Canada by subscription and single copy sales by agents in shops and other outlets.

R. PROOF OF PUBLICATION: Tear sheets of new display ads are mailed to those advertisers requesting this service. We regret we cannot provide this service to classified advertisers.

S. NOTE: All advertising orders are accepted subject to the terms and provisions of the current rate card. Krause Publications, Inc. reserves the right to decline advertising or suspend advertising privileges for such periods of time as in its discretion it sees fit, for any reason, whatsoever, irrespective of the validity of the reasons for such declination or suspension. The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. It is the advertiser's or agency's responsibility to obtain appropriate releases on any item or individual pictured in their advertising. All agreements are subject to strikes, accidents, acts of God, or other contingencies beyond the publisher's control. The publisher reserves the right to edit any advertising copy to conform with its standard advertising policies, and to reject any ad which in its opinion is unethical or objectional for any reason.

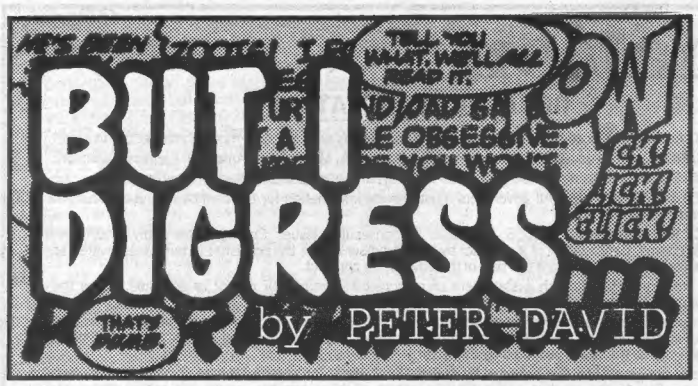
AUTHORIZED SIGNATURE(S) OF APPLICANT(S). _____



Finishing up the Who Fights Whom/Amalgam contest, here's the last of the most intriguing entries. It's been a lot of fun. And these are by no means all of them. I'm listing the ones that are, quite simply, my personal favorites. Sure, it's arbitrary. To paraphrase the parents of everyone in the world: As long as you're living in my column, you'll live under my rules. Italicized comments are mine.

For that matter, I'm curious: Are there other contests people would like to see? The Magazine of Fantasy and Science Fiction is always running contests that were created by reader suggestion. If it's good enough for that magazine, it's good enough for us. What sort of contests would you like to see? Lemme know.

In the meantime:

✉ From Donald Gehl, Springfield, Va.:

1) Fem-Force Works
2) Lady Justice League
3) G.I. Joe Palooka
4) Casper the Friendly Ghost Rider
5) Diana Prince Valiant
6) Mother Goose & Grimjack
7) Judge Dreadstar
8) Lone Ranger Rick
9) Curious George of the Jungle
10) Teenage Mutant Ninjak Turtles
11) Solar, Plastic Man of the Atom
12) Shi-Hulk
13) The Scarlet Witchblade
14) Shadow Hawkeye
15) Hi & Lois Lane

✉ From Kristine Kapp, Aurora, Colo.:

1) Zen Intergalactic Ninja High School
2) Quest for Spawn
3) Bullwinkle and Boris the Bear vs. Rocky and Mr. Peabody

✉ From Dennis Yee, Pleasant Hill, Calif.:

Battles:

1) The Atom vs. Atom Ant
2) Kamandi vs. Dinoboy
3) Swamp Thing vs. Pogo
4) Lobo vs. Calvin & Hobbes

Amalgams:

1) Mickey the Sorcerer Supreme Apprentice
2) Jonny Question

✉ From Brian Saner-Lamken, State College, Pa.:

Multiple Character Amalgams:

1) Captain Atom Ant Man: (Captain Atom, Atom Ant, and Ant Man)
2) Mr. Plastic Fantastic Man (Mr. Fantastic and Plastic Man)
3) The All-Winnie Squad

Brian doesn't mention who would constitute the members of the All-Winnie Squad, but it's certainly food for thought. Winnie Winkle, obviously, and Winnie the Pooh. It needs at least two more Winnies, I think, to make a squad Or, if you want to go in a different direction, you could have it be Comet the Super Horse, Black Beauty, My Friend Flicka, and Mr. Ed. And their opponents could be the Neigh-Sayers.

✉ From Tim Snyder, Frankfort, Ind.:

1) My Three Sons of Satan

✉ From Alan Irvine, Pittsburgh, Pa.:

1) All super-heroes, from every super-hero universe everywhere, vs. Groo.

They kind of did this: They let Sergio Aragonés loose on both the Marvel and DC universes, with painful results for both universes.

2) Grimjack vs. Sandman: Grim and Gritty

Bonus points for the single worst pun in the contest.

3) Donald Duck vs. Daffy Duck vs. Miz Goose, amalgamed into Duck, Duck, Goose

And that's a close second.

4) Mighty Mouse vs. The Power Rangers vs. Phantom Stranger, amalgamed as Mighty Mousin' Power Strangers

And that's a definite third.

Plus: A multi-part crossover between the Star Trek and Dilbert universes. We'd amalgam an Enterprise that actually functions like a real-world organization instead of existing in Earth-Star Trek where everyone is extremely competent and capable and gets along with all their colleagues all the time. The battles would include:

Geordi La Forge vs. Dilbert
Deanna Troi vs. Catbert
Commander Riker vs. Dogbert
Data vs. Wally
Captain Picard vs. The Pointy-Headed Boss

Most of the above would be intriguing match-ups — particularly Picard and the Pointy-Headed Boss — but I think I speak for everyone in saying that Dogbert would wipe the floor with Riker.

✉ From Wayne O. Williams, Richmond Va.:

I gotta say, I'd pay serious money to read the following:

1) Batman vs. Crying Freeman
2) Captain America vs. The Desert Peach

✉ From Arlen Barber, Duluth, Minn.:

1) Star Trek: The Next Generation's Q vs. James Bond's Q
2) Underdog vs. Krypto
3) Gigantor vs. Frankenstein Jr.

Amalgamizing:

1) NYPD Blue Beetleborgs

Featuring nudity and adult language, no doubt.

2) 3rd Rock from the Sunboy

✉ From Lee Houston, Jr., Houston, Texas:

1) Moby Dick Tracy
2) Sherlock Holmes Alone

And now, special awards:

☆ To Sean Develin, West Chester, Pa.:

The "Waaaay Too Much Time on His Hands Award" for the following, submitted with "Profuse apologies" (not profuse enough):

So anyway, Johnny the Homicidal Animaniac sets out on a Poison Elfquest which leads him to an island of all women where he is struck down by Stray Bullets in Paradise. The females doing the shooting are Josie and the W.I.L.D.Cats (Women in Lotsa Distress), who are actually aiming at their arch-rival Sabrina the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle. Aiding the latter entity is none other than Vamperonica, who recently had her butler suck the blood from a certain red-head's body.

A passing bird, having nothing better to do, carries the redhead's soul back to A&M Records, where she signs a deal under the name Cheryl Crow Blossom.

Meanwhile, back in the '70s, Valkyrie and her Lady Liberators are busy defeating Bobby Riggs in straight sets.

Professor X forsakes the live sports telecast to take a call from an irate Mr. Wilson, who is complaining that the kid next door must be "some kind of mutant." As this is the case, Charles sets about converting the Mitchell boy into Dennis the X-Menace, which is a tad easier than his Captain Scarlet Witchblade of the Immortal Doctor Fate conversion. Dennis' first act does nothing to improve mutant PR, when he beats the stuffing out of the guy in the UPN time slot next to Star Trek Voyager.

I'm thinking of calling this "All Abscess." Or maybe I should just Sim-plify the plot and do Elric as Foghorn Leghorn.

I think the movie soundtrack should include "Stairway to Free Bird" by Dread Zeppelin.

☆ To Kevin Kane, Louisville, Ky.:

The "How Do We Do It? Volume" Award for an entry featuring more than 130 amalgams combining comics with movies, books, and TV shows. These include:

1) Booster Gold Finger (Goldfinger and Booster Gold)
2) Reservoir Dogs of War (Reservoir Dogs and Dogs of War)
3) Deadman Walking (Dead Man Walking and Deadman)
4) Throw Mephisto from the Train (Throw Momma from the Train and Mephisto)

I don't know why I like that one. It makes no sense at all. But I do.

5) Shi-Devil (She Devil and Shi)
6) Rahne Man (Rain Man and Rahne (Wolfsbane))
7) A Very Brainy Sequel (A Very Brady Sequel and Brainiac)
8) Slaine's World (Wayne's World and Slaine the Berserker)
9) Swingblade: Vampire Hunter (Swing Blade and Blade: Vampire Hunter)

Billy Bob Thornton is ... Blade. The comedic possibilities of the monologue alone are priceless.

10) Old Aquaman and the Sea (Old Man and the Sea and Aquaman)
11) Super Whipping Boy (Whipping Boy and Superboy)
12) MacDeath (Macbeth and Death)
13) Grace under Fire Hair (Grace under Fire and Firehair)

There's something vaguely sexual about that which I can't quite pinpoint.

14) Beavis and Bru-Hed (Beavis and Butthead and Bru-Hed)
15) My Favorite Martian Attacks (My Favorite Martian and Mars Attacks!)
16) My So-Called Life with Archie (My So-Called Life and Life with Archie)
17) Dr. Quinn: Wonder Woman (Dr. Quinn: Medicine Woman and Wonder Woman)
18) Captain America's Most Wanted (America's Most Wanted and Captain America)

I thought we already knew Cap's Most Wanted: Mark Waid and Ron Garney.

And that's it. Thanks to everyone for playing.

Next week: We discuss how Captain America comics have proven that wrong is right and right is wrong.

★ A collectible that may have slipped by many comics fans notice recently is the Justice League collectors' plate, available exclusively at Warner Bros. Studio Stores.

The plate features Alex Ross art depicting the Silver Age Justice League characters: Superman, Batman, Aquaman, Green Lantern, Wonder Woman, Flash, and Martian Manhunter flying up in a circle, toward the viewer.

The plate is the latest in a series of plates available through the chain featuring a more '90s version of the JLA by Bill Sienkiewicz and Wonder Woman by Adam Hughes, along with plates with art from both Batman and Superman animated series.

The Silver Age Justice League plate is limited to an edition of 2500 and retails for $35.

★ Chalk up another tourist attraction in Orlando. Variety reports that Islands of Adventure, a new Universal Studios theme park, will open in the spring of 1999.

Called "the park for the new millennium," Islands of Adventure boasts Steven Spielberg as creative consultant, so expect at least one ride with a prehistoric feel.

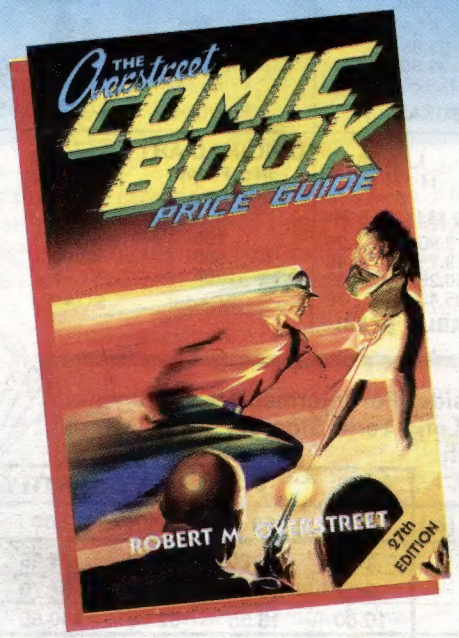
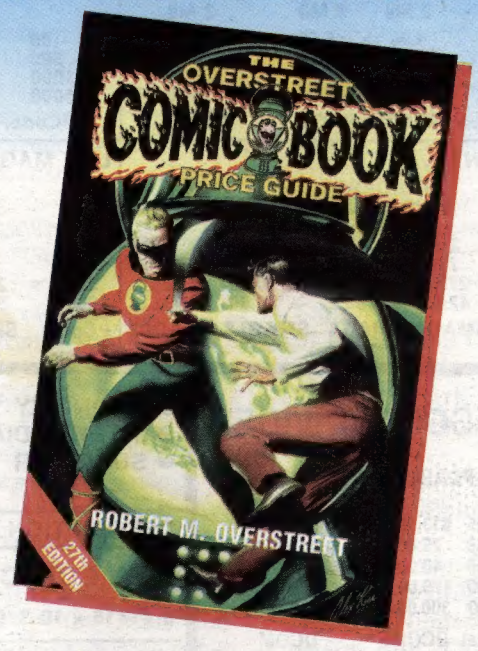
The Guide is a hit... again!



"The work of Alex Ross, ordinarily, is breathtaking. But when he does Golden Age, as with the two Overstreet 27th edition covers, he raises memory and nostalgia to the levels of High Art."

— Harlan Ellison



The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide (27th Edition) is now on sale! Featuring two stunning covers by Alex Ross and packed with amazing articles and information, this year's Guide is drawing rave reviews like these:

"Amazing! After 27 years the Overstreet Guide still comes through! I have spent several hours wallowing in nostalgia, experiencing pure pleasure with every page. A must for every fan."

— Murphy Anderson
Artist/Fan

"I learned a lot about the origin of the Batman mythos in the Jerry Robinson article. It was great!"

— Robert Beerbohm, Collector
Fremont, NE

"With the 1997 edition, Bob Overstreet has again shown why The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide is an event for all of comicdom."

— Jon S. Berk, Attorney
President - AACBC, Hartford, CT

"It is the indispensable guide for the serious collector. There is no other guide that comes close."

— Stephen Gentner, Collector
Portland, Oregon

"The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide continues to be the best source for the information on the history of comics, and the Market Report continues to act as a road map for serious collectors."

Gary Dolgoff, Dealer
Gary Dolgoff Comics, Northampton, MA

"I think it's very important to have a price guide that reflects what's going on in the marketplace. The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide does just that."

Stephen Fishler, Dealer
Metropolis Collectibles, Inc., New York, NY

"Overstreet — it's the Bible for the comic book collector as well as a wonderful source for reference."

Dan Greenhalgh, Dealer
Showcase New England
Wallingford, CT

"Overstreet's Price Guide is much more than an annual evaluation of market conditions. It is an indispensable encyclopedia of comic book data, the product of many years of careful research, virtually unavailable elsewhere."

— Eric J. Groves, Attorney/Collector
Oklahoma City, OK

"With the distribution of the new Overstreet Guide, Bob Overstreet continues to set the standard and publish pricing information that overshadows any other price guides' attempts to cover the market."

— James F. Payette, Dealer
Rare Books and Comics
Bethlehem, NH

"Due to the softness of current comic books in today's marketplace, I was very happy that this year's Guide took a very conservative posture on price increases."

— Ron Pussell, Dealer
Redbeard's Book Den, Crystal Bay, NV

"There's a reason Bob Overstreet's book continues to be an annual event: his pricing. It's the most comprehensive, accurate, up-to-date pricing in the business."

— Robert Rogovin, Dealer
